SAYS HITLER WILL ORDER REVOLUTION

Nazi Leaders in Austria Awaiting Commands From Germany
FIERCE REVENGE IS PREDICATED

VIENNA, Aug. 26 (AP).—A high Nazi leader tonight predicted "the next revolution will be bloodier than the last," as Austria's Christian authoritative Government, determined to avenge the assassination of Chancellor Engelbert Dollfuss, one month ago today, rallied its forces to stamp out all opposition.
"Now that the German plebiscite is over," the Nazi leader, who asked that his name be withheld for reasons of security, said bluntly, "we are awaiting orders from Adolf Hitler to start the next revolution."
"It will surely succeed where the last failed," he added.
PLAN REVENGE
"There will be fierce reprisals for the hanging of our Nazi comrades." One month ago today, Nazi rebels stormed Vienna's Federal Chancellory, pumped two bullets into Dollfuss' tiny body, and stood by while he died, his last thoughts for Austria.
Tonight, the records showed, his Nazi enemies had paid for the abortive revolt that brought death to Dollfuss.
An even dozen Nazis, convicted of implication in the July plot, among them the two held directly responsible for Dollfuss' assassination, have gone to the gallows.
Thousands of others—members of the Parliament and high political leaders among them—jam Austria's

Many Fine Horses Die In Flames

PITTSBURGH, Pa., Aug. 26 (AP).—Thirty-two horses, many of them thoroughbreds, were reported destroyed in a fire, early today, that swept the Benjamin Carr riding stables in Hampton Township, near suburban Glenshaw.
Carr was roused from sleep by a neighbor. He rushed to the stable and fought to get the steeds to safety. He collapsed after bringing fourteen from the burning building.
Some of the horses were the pride of wealthy Fox Chapel district residents, and were boarded at the Carr stables.

Thousands Gather At Gaspe to Honor Memory of Cartier

Delegation From France Welcomed to Canadian Shores—Premier Reads Message From King Expressing Pleasure at Honor Done Explorer

GASPE, Que., Aug. 25 (CP).—Jacques Cartier's spirit hovered, today, over the land of unspoiled beauty he discovered 400 years ago. Thousands of persons came to the beautiful Bay of Gaspe, encircled in its sombre mountains, and recalled, with deep emotion, the heroic deeds of Canadian history.
First of all in their memory appeared the great Odysseus of the sea, the brave captain of St. Malo, and they pictured him as one of those proud conquistadores of old on his gallant career setting his sail toward the stars.

Building Programme for Immediate Future Larger Than That of Any Year Since 1930—New Mill Construction Promises Additional Employment—Federal Plans Under Way

GREATER activity in construction and industrial development about Victoria and on Vancouver Island will be witnessed, this Fall, than at any period since 1930, a summary of the prospects of the next few months reveals. Plans are being laid for a large number of new undertakings, in addition to projects already announced. Further, it is expected that the Provincial Government will allocate some of the $1,000,000 advanced from Ottawa, apart from the Dominion's own programme of construction, for the purpose of improving the main highways of Vancouver Island.

IL DUCE WILL NOT PAY VISIT

Mussolini Decides Against Returning Hitler's Call—Is Note of Displeasure

ROME, Aug. 25 (AP).—Premier Benito Mussolini will not visit Chancellor Adolf Hitler at the latter's home, near Munich, this Fall, Government circles stated tonight.
Il Duce's decision to abandon plans for his second man-to-man talk with the leader of German Nazism, was considered in informed circles as pointed expression of Mussolini's displeasure at the assassination of Chancellor Engelbert Dollfuss, of Austria, by Nazi rebels last month.
The two men—Il Duce and Der Fuehrer—met June 15, at Venice (to try to dispel the clouds which darkened the horizon of European life, Mussolini said at the time).

Rebellious Convicts Set Fire to Jail and Farm Buildings

COLLEGEVILLE, Pa., Aug. 25 (AP).—Forty state policemen cowed 200 rampaging convicts and herded them into cells, today, at the Graterford Prison Farm, of the Eastern State Penitentiary, after a riotous three hours.
Incendiary fire and other destructive tactics caused a loss of thousands of dollars, it was said officially, but not a shot was fired. There were no serious casualties and no escapes.

FOREST FIRES WELL IN HAND

Provincial Authorities Report Several Still Burning but No Property Damaged

Forest fires, burning at several points in the districts surrounding Victoria, kept fire rangers and a small army of men hustling throughout yesterday to hold them in check and to protect campers' cabins, particularly in the lake district of Saanich, where a fire of fairly large proportions has been burning since early Friday afternoon.
So far, no property damage has been reported from any of the fires, although several small homes were in danger during the peak of the lake district blaze yesterday. These, however, were saved through the efforts of the firefighters with the aid of a shifting breeze, which carried the flames away from the cabins.
CAMPERS ALARMED
Some campers, alarmed at the closeness of the fire, packed their equipment into their automobiles and prepared for instant flight. Others were driven out by smoke, which hung over the settlement, scattering fine ash over miles of territory.

Snake Dancers Awaiting Rain

Faith of Hopi Indians Weakened by Failure of Strange Ceremony

HOTELVILLE, THIRD MESA, Ariz., Aug. 25 (AP).—The faith of the Hopi people is undergoing a severe test. The water gods of the underworld appear to be very angry.
For the first time in a long, long time rain has failed to follow the annual snake dance.
Reptile messengers to the underworld gods of moisture were released as sun sank redly last night. Purified in elaborate rituals and sprinkled with sacred meal, the snakes slithered away into the desert, carrying the Hopi prayers and pledges of fealty to the irate gods who hold in their hands the rain-giving thunderbolts.
Then the Hopi waited—in vain.

GERMAN CLERGY DEFY NAZI CHURCH BISHOP; FACE IMPRISONMENT

New Inquisition Set Up by Hitler Government to Force Clerics to Comply With Orders of Mueller—Many Refuse to Submit to Dictation

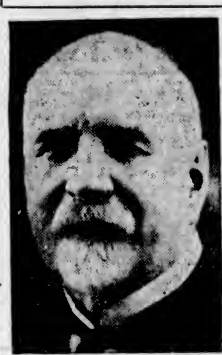

BERLIN, Aug. 25 (AP).—A new "inquisition," reportedly directed at opponents of Nazi Reichsbishop Ludwig Mueller's official German Protestant Church, tonight fed fuel to the flames of Germany's bitter church controversy. Secret police are busily engaged in arresting dissenting pastors, the reports said, and quizzing them on three issues: their attitude towards Mueller, their attitude toward the Nazi Government, and their belief in Aryanism.
Some of those found wanting, it was said, were sent to prison. Others were forbidden to communicate with their congregations in any way.

DEFY MUELLER

While churchmen hoped against hope that Chancellor Adolf Hitler, speaking at Coblenz tomorrow, would say something to clarify the church middle, pastors quizzed by the secret police were reported to have defied Mueller almost unanimously. They did not consider Mueller trustworthy, many were said to have replied; they did not believe his dictatorial position constitutional; they did not think his "National Synod" was legal.

MERCURY STILL REMAINS HIGH

Victoria Enters Upon Sixth
Day of Heat Wave—
Prairies Still Cool

Victoria will enter upon the sixth day of her extra warm spell today, the temperature yesterday having maintained the average maximum of the four previous days. The forecast for the next twenty-four hours is light to moderate winds, continued fine, and not much change in temperature.

The maximum here yesterday was 81 degrees, at Gonzales Observatory, while in Nanaimo the mercury rose to 86. Kamloops was the hot spot of British Columbia, with a record high of 94 degrees.

twenty-one guns, first gesture of Canadian welcome to the distinguished visitors.

People from all walks of life, civic leaders, high dignitaries of church, the wives and children of the hardy Gaspe fishermen—lined both shores as the various craft lined up the positions assigned to them.

From Balmoral, Castle, King George sent to Prime Minister R. B. Bennett a message expressing his pleasure as well as that of the Queen, at the honor done to the memory of the great explorer, Jacques Cartier, here today.

The King's message, read by the Prime Minister on the unveiling of Cartier's landing, was in reply to one from Mr. Bennett, expressing the loyalty and devotion of the Government and people of Canada.

THE KING'S MESSAGE
The text of His Majesty's reply was as follows:

"The Queen and I warmly thank you for the loyal message which you have addressed to me on behalf of the Government and people of Canada on the occasion of the unveiling of the Memorial Cross, commemorating the fourth centenary of the landing of Jacques Cartier. A great day dawned in the annals of history when Cartier reached the shores of Gaspe with his two small vessels, and I rejoice to learn that representatives of Great Britain, France, and the United States of America are gathered together to do honor to the memory of a most intrepid explorer."

"The past 400 years have witnessed vast changes in the land that Cartier saw. I am convinced, however, that the spirit and courage which animated the heroes of old still remain a precious heritage and under God's guidance will continue, today, to inspire the people of Canada in their united efforts for the greater happiness and prosperity of this great Dominion."

THE PREMIER'S MESSAGE
Mr. Bennett had cabled the King as follows:

"On the occasion of the unveiling of the Memorial Cross, erected at Gaspe to commemorate the fourth centenary of the landing of Jacques Cartier in Canada, the Government and people of Canada humbly convey to Your Majesty the sincere expression of their loyalty and devotion."

"Four hundred years ago the first cross was placed on Gaspe Peninsula in the name of France by the illustrious navigator from St. Malo, who opened to civilization that part of a new world. His achievements, which are forever gloriously inscribed on the opening pages of the History of North America, are now being commemorated in Canada, in gratitude to him and to the great country of his birth."

"English-speaking and French-speaking Canadians join in honoring the brave sailor and explorer who pointed the way to the opening and development by their common efforts of the northern half of a new continent."

"In the four centuries that have passed, both the old world and the new have undergone tremendous changes, but much abides. The presence, here today, of representatives of the Governments of British, France and the United States is proof of the enduring regard of the peoples of these countries for the qualities of religious devotion and hardy courage which the explorers and pioneers of old displayed, and of their adherence to the ideals of peace and good will to which this land was dedicated."

"May Divine providence, which directed Cartier to these shores on a mission of such promise, grant Your Majesty and Her Majesty the Queen long years of happiness."

ALL NATION TO HEAR
A great radio hookup was ready to carry Hitler's words to all Germany as Goebbels' smoothly-functioning propaganda machine set the stage for tomorrow's demonstration.

Hundreds of special trains, thousands of automobiles, and countless bicycles poured their multitudes into the Rhineland city, while 170,000 athletes, in another spectacular mass demonstration arranged by Goebbels, came running, bringing messages from virtually every German city.

Observers who viewed Catholic sentiment in the Saar as possibly the determining factor in the approaching election, believed that Hitler would have something important to say concerning the tangled church situation.

TAKE SERIOUS VIEW
While churchmen viewed with apprehension the advance of revived pagan faith movement, opposition to Reichsbishop Ludwig Mueller's official German Protestant Church continued, and the concordat with the Vatican, signed early this year, remained unratified.

Hitler, it was semi-officially reported last week, was considering so defining the Nazi state's attitude toward religion as to pour oil on present troubled waters.

A factor lending substance to those reports was the designation of Von Papen, loyal Catholic, to speak at Coblenz.

Goebbels' address was scheduled to be delivered in connection with the opening of the Saar Exposition at Cologne, Sunday forenoon.

machinery that had never turned a wheel. The hall had been wrecked.

"Then a barn inside the wall, known as No. 11, was set on fire."

USED CLUBS
"About noon, 200 of the prisoners, armed with clubs and bars of iron and tools, who apparently are responsible for the riot, after doing all the destruction they could in the cell blocks, got on a hill and defied the guards to come and get them."

"At this point, Captain Leithel, deputy warden in charge, called on Major Adams, of the state police, for reinforcements. Forty state policemen arrived in ten cars and more are being held in reserve nearby."

"The rioters on the hill were cowed by machine guns and rifles in the hands of the state police, searched for weapons and then were locked up in cells."

"Not a shot was fired that I know of, and no one was injured, except such injuries as might happen in the scuffle when the state police took charge of the 200 rioters on the hill."

Overcrowding, one of the conditions blamed for a series of outbreaks at Cherry Hill, last winter, does not exist at Graterford, officials said.

"Look here, young man," said the playwright father, "this report doesn't say very nice things about your work at school."

"Coming up in the train, dad, I was reading about the play you had produced last night, and—"

"Better have your tea, young fellow."

for Better

AAGAARDSTRAND, Norway, Aug. 25 (AP).—A turn for the better in the condition of the Netherlands' Queen Wilhelmina, ill here for the past five days, was unofficially reported tonight.

However, Princess Juliana and two personal maids continued in constant attendance at the Queen's hotel suite, here, acting under orders telephoned from the royal physicians at The Hague. No Norwegian doctors have been called in consultation.

It was understood the Queen, exhausted by the strain incident to the recent death of the Queen Mother and Prince Consort Henry, had been ordered to take a complete rest.

The party accompanying the Queen on the tour of Norway that was interrupted by her illness, including seven personal friends and two detectives, has made arrangements to stay here several days.

jails, already crowded with the thousands of Socialist leaders arrested in last February's Socialist uprising.

Fine totaling millions of schillings have been levied on influential Nazis and their supporters, in the Government's determination to make the Reich pay the cost of suppressing their short-lived insurrection.

Taking leave from the book of Chancellor Hitler, the world's number one Nazi, the Government apparently has decided to kill off opposition just as Hitler did.

SUPPORT POSITION
While underground rumblings of the likelihood of another Nazi revolt, Vienna's outward calm, Kurt Schuschnigg, Dollfuss' successor as Chancellor, and Vice-Chancellor Ernst von Starheimberg have lost no time in strengthening Austria's international friendships.

The two, separately, have visited Premier Benito Mussolini of Italy—who hurried hundreds of cannon and thousands of soldiers to the Austrian frontier when the Nazi revolt threatened to get out of hand—presumably to seek the Duca's financial and military aid in the event of another outbreak.

Meanwhile, speculation continues life as to the possibility of the restoration of the ousted Hapsburg monarchy.

PLANS TO CANOE ON CRATER LAKE
"Glacier Priest" to Drag Boat to Top of Katmai Volcano in Alaska

SQUAW HARBOR, Alaska, Aug. 25 (AP).—Father Bernard R. Hubbard, S.J., the "glacier priest," left here today, heading for the Katmai region on the Alaska Peninsula, where he and his party of six plan to explore the lake at the bottom of "the deepest crater in the world."

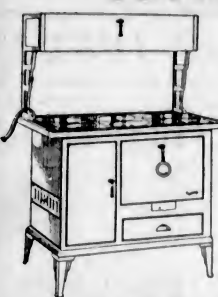

"We are going into the Katmai region with the intention of hitching a dog team to a canoe, dragging it to the top of Katmai Volcano, and by ropes and spikes on the treacherous 3,700-foot cliffs inside this deepest crater in the world, lower the canoe and camp equipment to the bottom of the volcano, filled by a lake, with ice around its sides and steam in the middle," Father Hubbard said.

Johnny had been disobedient, and finally his teacher asked him to stay after school.

"Johnny," she began, "I have to mark the report cards this evening. Now, what do you think I should do about yours?"

"Well," said the youngster, "I think you really ought to go home and have a good dinner and rest before you mark mine."

Fire in Club Fails to End Card Games

LONDON, Aug. 25 (AP).—Fire broke out early today in Crookford's Club, London's famous card-playing centre, but it takes more than fire to stop British card-players.

The fire started in the club's restaurant and spread so rapidly that some of the resident members who had gone to bed had to scamper outdoors in their night clothes. Many of the players, however, were too much engrossed in their games to do any hasty moving. Some carried their cards out with them, and at least one set of players, ignoring the general excitement, finished their interrupted game out in the street.

ENSHRINE PACT SEALING PEACE

Treaty of 1817 Insuring Amity on Border to Be Honored

NIAGARA-ON-THE-LAKE, Ont., Aug. 25 (CP).—Of seven sentences only, but a veritable marathon among the pacts of history, the Rush-Bagot agreement of 1817, between the United States and Great Britain, will be commemorated with due ceremony in the four-nation celebrations at Fort Niagara, on the American side of the border river, September 3 to 6. The treaty is one of the world's lengthiest in scope of operation and effective duration.

Three years of war between Great Britain and the United States, fought largely along the Canadian frontier, ended in 1815 with the Treaty of Ghent. But it was the agreement negotiated at Washington between Richard Rush, United States Secretary of State, and Sir Charles Bagot, the British ambassador, which provided the firm foundation for peace. Unusually brief for such far-reaching results, this document has already secured 117 years of international amity along the world's second longest international frontier, extending 3,986 miles from sea to sea.

RUSH-BAGOT TREATY

Incidentally, the Rush-Bagot treaty was the first naval limitation agreement entered into by the United States. In fact, the agreement simply committed the contracting parties to the limitation of armaments on the Great Lakes. But the spirit of international good-will it created and fostered has by tacit extension prevailed along the entire United States-Canadian frontier as civilization and colonization moved toward the setting sun on both sides of the border.

To recall the consummation of the treaty and the resulting era of peace, now in its second century, representative British, French, American and Canadian men and women will attend the celebrations in September. One of the major events of the four-day programme will be the unveiling of an imposing sandstone monument to the Rush-Bagot treaty. The memorial will surmount the Lake Ontario parapet of historic old Fort Niagara, whose complete restoration to ancient splendor the celebration will also mark.

TEXT OF MEASURE

The proclamation of the treaty by President James Monroe, on April 28, 1818, follows: "Whereas an arrangement was entered into in the city of Washington, in the month of April, in the year of Our Lord one thousand eight hundred and seventeen, between Richard Rush, Esq., at that time acting as Secretary for the Department of State of the United States, and the Right Honorable Charles Bagot, His Britannic Majesty's envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary, for and in behalf of His Britannic Majesty; which arrangement is in words following, to wit: "The naval force to be maintained upon the American lakes, by His Majesty and the Government of the United States, shall henceforth be confined to the following vessels on each side, that is: "On Lake Ontario, to one vessel not exceeding one hundred tons burden, and armed with one eighteen-pound cannon.

"On the Upper Lakes, to two vessels, not exceeding like burden each and armed with like force. "All other armed vessels on these lakes shall forthwith be dismantled, and no other vessels of war shall be there built or armed.

"If either party should be hereafter desirous of annulling this stipulation, and should give notice to that effect to the other party, it shall cease to be binding after the expiration of six months from date of such notice.

"The naval force so to be limited shall be restricted to such services as will in no respect interfere with the proper duties of the armed vessels of the other party. "And whereas the Senate of the United States have approved of the said arrangement and recommended that it should be carried into effect, the same having also received the sanction of His Royal Highness, the Prince Regent, acting in the name and on behalf of His Britannic Majesty. "Now, therefore, I, James Monroe, President of the United States, do, by this my proclamation, make known and declare that the arrangement aforesaid, and every stipulation thereof, has been duly entered into, concluded and con-

Victoria Says Good-By to Hon. George A. Bucklin and Family

The Hon. George A. Bucklin, retiring American Consul in Victoria, with his wife and family, is leaving Victoria this afternoon for California on the first lap of the long journey that will carry him to New Zealand, where he is to assume his new appointment as Consul-General of the Dominion.

Mr. Bucklin began his duties in Victoria on September 4, 1924, so that he has been consul here for almost exactly ten years. During this time he and his family have won the affection of the entire community, both in their official and more intimate personal relationships with the public, having shown a gracious cosmopolitanism that has made a deep impression on all.

This cosmopolitanism has been strengthened by varied experience in the United States consular service, for, in addition to appointments in Mexico, where he was for two years, and other Central American countries, Mr. Bucklin spent years in the service in Europe. He was at Bordeaux for six years, including the entire period of the war. Paris for eighteen months, and Coblenz, Germany, for two years. He came to Victoria from Sault Ste. Marie, Ontario, where he was temporarily assigned pending the appointment of a permanent official.

A singular honor is in his possession. This is honorary membership in the American Association of the Veterans of Foreign Wars, awarded him because of his association with the American forces overseas during the four years of war. The decoration, as far as known, has never been presented to any other United States civilian. Knowing the retiring consul's tactful and charming manner as Victoria does, everyone will appreciate the real reason for the award of this honor.

While Victoria says au revoir reluctantly, it is with the hope that Mr. and Mrs. Bucklin may eventually return here to live when Mr. Bucklin's time for retiring comes. Before they sail from San Francisco about the end of August, Mr. Bucklin, accompanied by Miss Mary Bucklin, will go to Florida to say good-by to his mother, Miss Margaret Bucklin and the son, Edwin Bucklin, will accompany Mr. and Mrs. Bucklin to New Zealand, but for a time, at least, the Misses Mary and Adele will remain in California to continue their musical studies.

CAPTAIN HAS NO FEAR FOR OMENS

Started on Friday 13, but Is Still in Service After Life of Thrills

MONTREAL.—After leading a life filled with thrills, Capt. Charles Richardson has decided that omens carry no danger for him. Although a man with whom he swapped jobs went to sea, was torpedoed, taken to a German prison camp and returned home to die shortly after the war, Captain Richardson lived to become a real sea captain. He received his first command on Friday, which happened to be the thirteenth day of the month, and went out of port the same day.

Captain Richardson first took to the sea in 1884, when he was an apprentice aboard the three-master Durham, rolling down to Rio with a coal cargo. In those days it took six weeks to sail from Cardiff to Rio de Janeiro.

"Ginger Dick," as the captain is called because of his once ginger-colored hair, seems always to have been in the thick of things. He made his first voyage as chief officer on the Tuscan when she took the first Canadian Continent in convoy from Gaspe to Britain. Then he was on the Heplerian when she was torpedoed and sunk ninety miles off Falmouth with a loss of twenty-seven lives. She was what is known as a "black hospital" ship, a vessel carrying hospital cases without the conventional lights and markings.

During the post-war years "Ginger Dick" served as an officer on the Montclair, the Metagama, the Duchess of Bedford and the Empress of Australia.

BELGRADE, Jugoslavia, Aug. 25 (AP).—European chancelleries, intently watching as traditional Balkan animosities seem to be giving way to new friendships, are looking forward with interest to the projected visit of King Alexander of Jugoslavia to King Boris of Bulgaria at Sofia, on September 8. Equally interesting is the forthcoming visit of King Carol of Rumania to King Boris.

ERECT MEMORIAL TO EARLY LEADER

Historical Society Would Mark Life's Work of Sir John Abbott, Former Premier

ST. ANDREWS EAST, Que.—Erection of a suitable memorial to the late Sir John Abbott, first Canadian-born Premier of the Dominion, will be the first and immediate concern of the newly formed Historical Society of Argenteuil County. Sir John, who succeeded Sir John A. Macdonald, was Conservative Premier from June 16, 1891, to December 5, 1892, when he resigned and was followed by Sir John Thompson of the same party. Sir John Abbott died in 1893.

WAS VILLAGE LAD

Sir John began life in this community as a simple village lad who, by sheer force of ability and personal strength of character, rose to a position of immense influence in the councils of the Dominion. He was known throughout his life as an honorable man who scorned publicity for his own sake, and gave unselfishly and unflinchingly of his powers for the benefit of his community and the nation. It is proposed that the memorial be placed in the church built in this parish by his father, Rev. Joseph Abbott.

PREPAREDNESS

Mr. Stanley Baldwin has told the British House of Commons that successive British Governments have carried the process of unilateral disarmament so far as to leave "little to give away and nothing to bargain with." He spoke reluctantly when he said that it was impossible for Britain to remain as she is in the matter of armaments. She must follow the example set by other countries, for if she does not she may find herself later in terrible jeopardy. "No Government," he said, "can take the responsibility of reducing this country in the world as it is today to a state of defencelessness."

There is no doubt whatever that had Britain remained better armed she would have been able to influence the course of disarmament conferences. It is only a Britain that is a stronger contribution to collective security that can play her part in carrying out the commitments of the Locarno Pact. The truth is that Britain, at least under her present Government, has come to an end of the perilous process of bargaining with the vital defences of the country. The plain evidence of facts has taught her, contrary to the viewpoint entertained by the pacifists, that unilateral disarmament is not the way to peace. The weaker a country is the more liable it is to aggression in an armed world. The consequence is that Britain is reawakening to the necessities of national defence. Her air strength is to be increased substantially. As well as this, Mr. Baldwin says that sea communications, on which the life of Britain depends, cannot be defended from the air, but by a fleet in being. Hence there is to be reconditioning of the Navy, it is to be strengthened to the limits allowed by the London Treaty, and the probability is that when the time comes that treaty will be denounced and Britain will remain in future the arbiter of her own inviolability. She has gone through a spell of pacifism. Other nations have gone on rearming. Any nation to secure its safety must be ready to defend itself in this world, where the old Adam has not been exorcised from the hearts of men.

BELIEF AND CONDUCT

It is undoubted that those who are the best Christians know that practice is higher than profession, and conduct above creed. There are certain rules and principles that guide organized society. There are dictates of the Christian soul that have nothing to do with sectarian controversy, that grow out of an innate knowledge inspired by belief. There is a sacredness in truth that is too often neglected by accredited teachers and preachers of religion. The credenda of society, embodied in outward form, has its value, but it has to do with the behavior of a human being towards his fellows and their behavior in the mass. It has nothing to do with the practices that ought to be followed in a spiritual sense. There are forms of religion which decree individual practice. They, too, demand an outward and visible sign, and yet, as Pope wrote in his Essay on Man:

"For modes of faith let graceless zealots fight,
He can't be wrong whose life is in the right."

It may be questioned if there are any stereotyped, unchanging beliefs that are necessary to right conduct. Creeds are valuable; they are oases in the desert of life. It is not a creed, however, that is the goal of Christian endeavor: it is the faith and morals of which the life of Christ was the prototype. What we believe does not matter so much as the manner in daily living in which that belief is expressed, its influence through example on our fellows, and the effect it has in shaping individual characters. Conduct may, to an extent, be guided by the influence of the family, the school, the social or the professional circle. Character is also affected by these environments. There are laws, ideals and an appointed service. These things, however, only touch the soul incidentally. They do not necessarily mean or express the highest standards of truth, righteousness and duty. There is an exercise of freedom for the soul that is demanded whatever the human limitations imposed by society. That does not mean a conflict between conscience and society, but the latter as such never calls for the highest moral standards. The summons in the individual life is the inner voice of conscience, a law which is not vitiated, calls for nothing less than the ideal. It is that law which should be allowed to develop so that it controls conduct; it is that voice which must be heard if man would be true to himself.

All history is a lesson that leadership in politics, morals or in religion means an advance beyond custom's standards. The larger vision of truth, wherever it comes, breaks away from accepted standards. That vision in the realm of the highest Christianity is the expression and reiteration of the eternal realities which lie at the end of the road of spiritual progress, and, as one writer says, "Far beyond the bidding of ancestral custom in worship, in national life, in personal morality." The difference between custom and conscience should be one recognized and the one merged with the other for human good as a whole. Conscience can be made to stand for the good of the individual; custom is decreed for the well being of the community. It is recognition of these definitions and their reconciliation that can bring the Church into the fullest and freest fellowship of life. The Church's appeal is to the individuality of spiritual man. If there is the response hoped for and a man converts his hope, his faith and belief into action, not only is he developing his fullest powers of personality, but he is making for the splendor of that fellowship that can bring the nearest possible approach to the Kingdom of God on earth.

There is a timeless and universal cry that goes up from the human race—"who shall deliver us?" The answer resides in each individual human heart. There is a religion that is all-pervading, provided all conduct is decreed by it. Then there is an assurance that it is not mere lip service, not assertions that there is belief. It is the putting in practice of the highest thoughts that makes character, that develops the soul, that brings happiness in its train. It is only necessary to go back to the basic principle of all Christianity. That is the principle of redemption. That is the answer to the cry for deliverance; that is what awakens in the heart the quest after that perfection through which redemption is won. He who follows that quest has eternity in his heart. By his course of action, not merely an expressed belief, he is seeking for the light, and in the search he wins peace. He wins more, for he will have all that energy and freedom of soul which peace alone can bring. The victory of religion is a victory of conduct. It is not enough to love in word or in tongue, but in deed and in truth. Here is the dictum of the greatest Authority on faith and morals: "Not every one that saith unto Me 'Lord, Lord,' shall enter into the Kingdom of Heaven, but he that doeth the will of My Father which is in Heaven."

FACE POWDER

The medical profession has the habit of taking a lot of joy out of life, but it is done with the best intentions. Who would a girl be without face powder? Worse to look at, no doubt, but better in health. In this respect the doctors, or at least those who gathered at a recent meeting of the British Medical Association, decry the use of face powder because it is the cause of internal irritation. This is the dictum of an expert in vaso-motor-rhinitis. It appears, therefore, that the twentieth century misses have well-powdered noses, showing a brave front to the world, while concealing a disposition to catarrhal infection. There is a price to be paid for the concealment of ravages of complexion by face powder. It is a price worth paying, according to The London Morning Post, which says:

"Women are never so happy as when they are making personal sacrifices in a great cause, and if the nation is to keep up appearances in these trying times it is more than ever necessary, that wives and sweethearts should set an example in composure. And no face with a shiny nose can feel composed. Moreover, if one possesses a beautifully-powdered nose, it is only natural one should occasionally wish to emit disdainful sniffs at those who have neglected this elementary exercise in modern manners! The only alternative to the powdered nose is the sun-burnt nose—and, of course, it must not be too tan, during these last few Summers of exceptional sunshine, has indeed become a more popular shade than that of face powder. So perhaps British women will gradually release themselves from the dangers of catarrh by going in for dry instead. Provided they do not revert to the use of the wood, their menfolk will not raise any objection."

LAUNCH OF 534

Cunarder 534, the world's largest vessel, is to be launched on September 26, and the day may be declared a public holiday at Clydebank. His Majesty and the Queen are to be present, and ceremonies at the launch will be broadcast internationally. The great ship is a launching trigger now in position. There are four on each side of the hull of the vessel, with a hydraulic load of 300 tons. They will be operated by an electric button. The rudder of the vessel containing 163 tons of streamlined steel, already constructed and attached, is so delicately poised with such a perfect balance that it will absorb to the highest degree the stresses of steering. The vessel has eleven decks, and construction is now under way on the cabins on the lower deck. The 534 will be the world's most complete vessel, with first class accommodation prepared from new designs and plans. Although no final decision has been reached there is a proposal that it should be christened the Victoria in honor of the late, great queen.

Note and Comment

By R. B. D.

Man, seek no longer the origin of evil;
Thou thyself art its origin.—Rousseau.

Notwithstanding the state of affairs throughout the world today, there is still some comfort in the assurance that the earth shall be an inheritance of the peacemakers. But human nature is peculiar, and we fear it may be a year or two, at least, before the blessed shall come into their inheritance. There are so many disturbing elements in the world that strife, and not peace, seems to be the destiny of mankind. There is not only strife between nations. There is strife within the nations. If we are to have prosperity, we must first have internal peace within the nations. There is only one nation of the first magnitude in the world where internal peace seems to prevail and a fair degree of prosperity abounds. That blessed nation, of course, is Great Britain, and even there there are elements which may provoke internal discord.

Personally we are convinced that peace is the thing most to be desired. If peace and prosperity are to be assured, personally we also are convinced that the love of money is not the root of all the evil in this world; that politics, not love of money, is at the bottom of most disorders, and therefore the root of most of the evil which seems to be our inheritance. When men become politically ambitious, it seems as if there were nothing of a truly reprehensible nature they will not resort to in order to attain the summit of their vaulting ambitions.

In considering this proposition, it is not necessary to point out what has happened in Germany or what may possibly happen on the other side of the Pacific Ocean to draw a moral or adorn a tale. There is no internal peace in the United States, and the strife there is chiefly political. If the people of the nation were peacefully inclined and united in their objective, the daring experiment of President Roosevelt and his Brain Trust might not be an object of opposition or derision. But the nation is divided against itself. A former candidate for President has joined the forces of the Republican opposition for the purpose of thwarting the economic policies of the elected President. Politics is the root of most of the troubles of the people of the United States.

In the course of a year or two there will be a general election in Great Britain, when the National government will have run its allotted constitutional course. Then the peace-loving people of the Old Land will be divided against themselves politically, and politically the hands of members of families will be raised against one another. The father will be politically against the son and the son politically against the father. In many cases common sense and sound reason will be arrayed against prejudice, for when political passions are aroused unreason is stronger than reason. The Black Shirts did not obtain even a foothold in Britain, but there is an element there as far as peace is concerned more to be feared than the scattered cohorts of Sir Oswald Mosley.

Politics is at the root of most of the troubles and disabilities from which the Irish Free State is suffering. We admit it is futile to discuss the Irish situation, for the prejudices which exist in that always distrustful country are centuries old and apparently ineradicable. When reason tumbles from her throne, there is no common sense left as an ultimate court of appeal.

Canada has successfully if not triumphantly survived the depression. Next to Great Britain the Dominion is the most prosperous nation in the world today. The policies of the Canadian government have been tested and have been in a great, if not in a full, measure successful. We are on the way and we know where we are going. But there have been tribulations and trials for the governments of the provinces. There have been bad harvests and consequent local depression and lack of employment. This state of affairs has had what is called reactions and repercussions. The reactions have unsettled public opinion, and the repercussions have upset governments.

That is characteristic of human nature. The policies of governments may have had something to do with the reactions of public opinion, but the policies of government did not affect crops and harvests—and if the matter were probed to the root it might be found that the actions of the people rather than the actions of governments were chiefly responsible for the hard times. All governments were extravagant. They borrowed too freely and spent unwisely, and the only defence they offer is that they borrowed and spent by demands of the people.

Thus the conclusion of the whole matter is that all the ills from which we suffer are due to politics. And when politics becomes a vice, its effects are more to be dreaded than the vice of the love of money.

Miss Effie Unwin—An Appreciation

By ETHEL SEYMOUR

Miss Dora Ethel Unwin (Effie) was the youngest of a very large family of devoted brothers and sisters. She was born at Mill Hill, Middlesex, England, and came to Victoria in 1912, with several members of the family, who all reside in Oak Bay.

For many years she had been a valued member of the executive of St. Mary's branch of the Women's Auxiliary of the Church Missionary Society, and in spite of illness, it was only at the last general meeting that she resigned the secretaryship, a post she had long and ably filled.

Though by nature very reserved, her absolute reliability, her utter disregard of self, her readiness to do anything to help anyone, inspired love in all who knew her, and her loss is almost as much a loss to the church and missionary society as it is to her home. "Her life was filled with so many sweet and kind deeds, that those who knew her think only of her as passing to another life, and continuing going about doing good."

Death left an aching void where he had passed;
And one sad sister, who had loved her so,
Who could not bear her name without a tear—
Not even at the passing of a year:
Who could not wait
The destined time for souls to reunite,
Drew near, and nearer, to the gate
Which leads to timeless Day, and Shuts out Night.

ETHEL SEYMOUR.

TO DEAN INGE, OF ST. PAUL'S CATHEDRAL

Thanks and farewell, prophet of brighter dawn;
Thrice armed against our fetichers;
Weider of flashing phrase;
At grips with baffling creed;
Fearless to utter thoughts
That others shrank but hide.

Who sees, through colored glass of ancestry,
A light from out the East,
A comet's tail through darkling space,
Across our firmament.

High music breathes a benison
To cheer your parting feet;
While there be those now and to come,
Whose hearts will lighten to the thought,
Often Christ laughed aloud.

Damage Everybody Profit Nobody

Moderate care with matches, smoking materials, camp fires, brush-burning fires, and mechanical equipment would eliminate more than 50 per cent of our forest-fire occurrence.

SMOKE IMPEDES FIRE FIGHTERS

Forest Service Checked in Idaho by Density of Smoke

SPOKANE, Aug. 25 (AP).—The Forest Service's plan of battle against one of the three most troublesome fires in Central Idaho tonight awaited the reports of scouts. So dense was the smoke on the east flank of the Pete King fire, near Gedney Creek, in the Selway Forest, that foresters could not determine the nature of their problem until the area had been scouted. The wind, kind to the fighters in other battles today, had given them this setback. The south flank of the fire was treacherous, said Major Evan Kelley, Missoula, regional forester. About 50,000 acres have been burned over.

ROUGH COUNTRY

Another bad spot in Idaho was the burn near Avery. So rough is the country on the north fork of the St. Joe River that it was virtually impossible to place men, said Major Kelley, so that the crews must wait until the fire backs down toward the river. A similar condition prevailed on the slope toward the main river, under Nelson Peak. The Avery fire was held on other flanks, however, and 100 more men were ordered to the front from Coeur d'Alene, Idaho, making about 700 battling the 12,000-acre fire.

ARE BACKFIRING

The largest fire in the region, the 70,000-acre McLean Butte burn, in the Selway Forest, was nearing control, the wind having been favorable. The men were on the back-firing stage. In the same forest, the Martin Creek blaze appeared to be submitting to the importunities of the foresters after the worst spots were rounded up. Other fires in the region were controlled, said Major Kelley.

TROLLEY OPERATOR IN BUFFALO SLAIN

BUFFALO, Aug. 25 (AP).—Robert Johnston, Sr., veteran trolley operator, was found slain today; his skull crushed because, police believe, he reprimanded his assailant for insulting a woman passenger. Johnston, married and father of two children, was held to death in the view of several passengers.

That Body of Yours

CAUSE OF APPENDICITIS UNKNOWN—EARLY TREATMENT PREVENTS DEATHS

As no one has yet been able to tell the cause of appendicitis, it is really in the same class as cancer—a disease with an unknown cause. Just as there are many theories as to the cause of cancer, so also with appendicitis. Dr. A. Krecke, of Munich, mentions seven theories as to the cause of appendicitis: (1) Infection—from teeth, tonsils, gall bladder, intestine or elsewhere; (2) a spasm or closing of the opening of the appendix into the large intestine, which prevents the contents of appendix from coming out into the intestine and getting carried away with the other wastes from the food; (3) any obstruction which interferes with the movements of the walls of the appendix; (4) any error in diet or the eating of certain kinds of food; (5) any foreign bodies or substances—grape seeds or little hard food particles; (6) any injury to the appendix; (7) an ailment similar to other ailments, which is liable to start in any community.

Dr. Krecke does not pin his faith on any one of these theories. Foreign bodies—grape seeds, for instance—very seldom cause appendicitis. However, just as in cancer, early operation saves life, so also in appendicitis. If discovered and operation performed within the first thirty-six hours, the death rate is very, very low, whereas after thirty-six, forty-eight, and seventy-two hours, the death rate becomes two, three or even four times as high. The biggest trouble physicians have is to be called in to see a patient who has a "stomach ache," and either took or was given a dose of castor oil or epsom salts to "clear out the stomach and intestine." It is this giving of a purgative which causes the high death rate in appendicitis, as the purgatives may cause the appendix to burst, resulting in peritonitis.

The high death rate in Philadelphia led to a campaign beginning in 1930 to stop chemists, doctors and patients administering purgatives, and to prevent delay in patients with pain in stomach and abdomen in finding out whether or not their pain was due to appendicitis. This campaign reduced the death rate in Philadelphia to the lowest in any big American city. Remember, a pain starting in the "stomach," staying there for three to four hours, and then going down to lower right side of abdomen, is usually, but not always, appendicitis.

DISPLEASED BY REINSTATEMENT

Tsolum Residents Express Confidence in School Trustees but Law Is Law

COURTENAY, Aug. 25.—At a public meeting in the Tsolum Consolidated Schoolhouse, on Friday night, the residents of that district decided to defy the School Act. By a vote of fifty-six to eight, confidence was expressed in the trustees, who were authorized to act as they see fit. The meeting was a result of the reinstatement of Principal R. A. Lyons, by the appeal board of the Province. H. Cox occupied the chair and Mrs. A. Carwithen spoke for the trustees. Theed Pearce appeared for Mr. Lyons and said that no decision that the meeting may reach could alter the case. The matter had been disposed of by the proper authorities. The trustees may not like the act, he said, but it is the only act we have and the proper procedure had been carried out.

MOISTURE BOMBS BRING THE RAIN

Rainmaker Points Gun Into Heavens and Gets Shower Ten Minutes After Blast

WAXAHACHIE, Texas, Aug. 25 (AP).—James Bore, a synthetic rainmaker, shoved one of his "moisture bombs" into a mortar near here, late today, pointed it toward a threatening black cloud in the heavens, let it fly, and—there was rain! As Bore, who had originally intended to drop his bombs from an airplane, prepared to release the shell from the ground, he told his crowd of spectators: "Gentlemen, in ten minutes, there will be rain."

Ten minutes later the crowd stood in the middle of a shower. Bore said that immediately after the return, here, of his pilot, Wilford Bolenfeldt, they would take 600 bombs into the air and release them in an effort to flood the drought-ravaged area. A young man from the South went to spend his holidays with some friends in Yorkville. He caught a chill in traveling and was confined to bed. His hostess thought she would give her visitor a treat during his confinement, so she baked a Yorkshire pudding and took it upstairs. "Just try this," she said, "It'll shift your cold."

Earth Moves Mysteriously In Trinidad

PORT OF SPAIN, Trinidad, Aug. 24 (AP).—The earth moved mysteriously here, today, and suddenly Trinidad's south coast had 300 feet of new beach.

Inland, however, Nature took compensation for her generosity. The earth sank in serried furrows, presenting the appearance of ploughed fields. Trees tipped and leaned at odd, drunken angles. The phenomenon—credited by authorities to gas pressure which, they believed, changed the earth's substructure—occurred between Chatham and Erin, on Erin Bay, ten miles from Port of Spain. Access to the bay is difficult by land.

YOUTH HURT IN TRAFFIC SMASH

George Parib, Eighteen, Sustains Fractured Skull in Accident—Condition Fair

Suffering from a fractured skull, concussion of the brain, fractured left arm and multiple cuts and bruises, Douglas Parib, aged eighteen years, 1575 Pembroke Street, lies in Royal Jubilee Hospital, as the result of a traffic accident, yesterday. Condition of the youth, at a late hour last night, was reported somewhat improved. Dr. A. C. Sinclair was in attendance. The accident occurred when the motorcycle driven by young Parib collided with a motor truck at the intersection of Douglas and Pembroke streets. According to a police report, the motorcycle crashed into the rear of the truck, operated by Thomas Cannon, 1744 Duchess Street, as the truck was turning from Douglas Street to go west on Pembroke Street. Both machines were proceeding north. The youth was thrown from his motorcycle, and struck the wooden frame side of the truck.

The film star approached her publicity man.

"Look here, I don't seem to be much in the news at present," she said. "Can't you think of something really startling for me?" The publicity man looked thoughtful. "What about being seen with your husband one day next week?" he suggested.

One more week and the final month of the Amateur Snapshot Competition, held by The Daily Colonist, comes to a close. Every month during the Summer The Colonist has asked for the most interesting snapshots to be sent into the office, cash prizes and awards being offered for the best twenty-nine each month. These awards have taken the form of fourteen cash prizes and fifteen easel-mount enlargements presented by the Crystal Finish Photographers of Victoria to those contestants receiving honorable mention.

The judges, namely A. V. Pollard, Associated Screen News, Ltd.; E. J. Savannah, Savannah's Studios; and Hester Wilkinson, portrait photographer, have selected the winning prints from the vast numbers submitted each month. They have been asked to make their choice from a standpoint of subject interest rather than technical skill, in this way throwing the contest open to everyone who owns, or can borrow a camera.

Many and varied are the subjects that amateur photographers have hit upon, ranging from glimpses of incidents around the home, full of appeal to all who recognize the atmosphere of work and play with which all are familiar, to pictures of scenic beauty close at hand and far afield. There is still time for entries to be sent in and every mail brings a fresh consignment of photographs for the August judging. Entries may be submitted up to Saturday night, the judging to take place the following week.

At the present time the numbers of snapshots sent in for August far outnumber those of any previous month, and the officials are hoping to set a new high mark when the judging takes place. Everyone, tyro and expert alike, are urged to send in their pictures and participate in the contest.

Film Director—So you think you can stand the severe duties of a film actor? You know, in this picture we may find it necessary to throw you down a flight of stairs into a barrel of water! Applicant—Oh, I can stand that. I was collector for an installment furniture house for three years.

Young Mrs. Scott was attending her first ball game. The home team was doing well that day, and for a time she patiently endured her husband's transports and his participation. But when, amid the cheering, howling crowd he sprang upon his seat, waved his new straw hat three times around his head and almost shattered it on the fat man in front, Mrs. Scott exclaimed: "What on earth's the matter, John?"

"Why, dearie," he answered, as soon as he could get his breath, "Didn't you see the felder catch the ball?" "Of course," said young Mrs. Scott, disgustedly. "I thought that was what he was out there for."

A man was leaving a hospital after a long illness, and was trying to express his gratitude to the sister of the ward for her great kindness. "I shall never forget what you have done for me," he said firmly. "You have been really wonderful, and I have thought many times that you must truly be a fallen angel."

Miss Cambrey Is Married to Mr. J. Tindell

St. Mark's Church, Bolekine Road, was filled last night for the wedding of Phyllis, youngest daughter of Mrs. J. Cambrey, 905 Darwin Road, and of the late Mr. Cambrey, and Mr. John Tindell, son of Mr. and Mrs. Ernest Tindell, England. Rev. O. L. Jull conducted the service, and Mrs. F. W. L. Moore presided at the organ and accompanied Mrs. Bertucci, who sang "O Promise Me" during the signing of the register. The charming floral decorations in the church had been carried out with pink and white flowers and greenery. The guest pews were tied with bunches of sweet peas and white tulips, and during the service the bride and groom stood beneath an arch of flowers.

ATTRACTIVE BRIDE
The bride was given in marriage by her brother, Mr. James Cambrey, tall, dark, and well-dressed, and wore a pretty beffled frock and a frilled shoulder cape of shell pink organza and a large picture hat of the same material. She carried a shower bouquet of Ophelia roses, white carnations and swansons. Her only attendant was Miss Louise Gardiner, in a frock of eggshell blue silk net with three rows of frills above the hem line, worn with a frilled cape and tied at the waist with a sash of pink velvet. Her large hat had a pink crown and a blue brim and was trimmed with a bandeau of flowers. She carried a bouquet of pink carnations and blue laceflowers. The bride's brother, Mr. Leslie Cambrey, was best man, and the ushers were her nephew, Mr. James Cambrey, Jr., and Mr. Henry Hayes.

RECEPTION AT LAKE HILL

A reception was held after the service at the home of the bride's brother, Mr. James Cambrey, Reynolds Street, Lake Hill. The hostess, Mrs. James Cambrey, wore a smart gown of royal blue georgette and a white hat, and received the guests with the bride's mother, who wore a gown of navy blue floral crepe and a black and white hat. They both wore corsage bouquets of roses and sweet peas. The bride and groom stood beneath a floral arch between tall baskets filled with gladioli and ferns to receive the good wishes of their friends. Supper was served from a table centred with the wedding cake and arranged with vases of sweet peas. After a honeymoon in Vancouver and other places on the Mainland, Mr. and Mrs. Tindell will make their home on Darwin Road. The bride left in a smart dove-grey swaggar suit with white lapels and cuffs and a white turban and veil and white accessories. Mr. and Mrs. Tindell received a large number of lovely gifts, among them being a cheque from the British-American Paint Company, where the bride was formerly employed.

Weddings PHILION-COX

A pretty wedding was solemnized yesterday morning, at 11:30 o'clock at St. Andrew's Cathedral, when Evelyn Gertrude, only daughter of Mr. and Mrs. George Cox, 1603 Jubilee Avenue, was united in marriage to Mr. John Eugene Philion, only son of Mrs. C. T. Ward, of Victoria, and of the late Mr. J. G. Philion, of Prince Albert, Saskatchewan. Nuptial Mass was celebrated by Rev. Father J. A. Gaudette, and Rev. Father Albury played organ. The wedding music on the organ throughout the service. The bride looked beautiful in her wedding gown of white georgette and lace, with a veil of Brussels net, hemmed with tiny pearls and wreathed with a small strand of lily of the valley. She carried a shower bouquet of pink roses and maidenhair fern. Her two bridesmaids were Miss Nona Bjornfelt, who wore a figured georgette dress in shades of blue and rose, and a mohair hat to match, and by Miss Dorothy Whittingham in a blue net figured dress with hat to match. Both bridesmaids carried colonial bouquets. Mr. William Adam was best man.

The wedding breakfast, attended by relatives and a few intimate friends, was held at the home of the groom's mother. For her going-away costume, the bride wore a powder blue dress and a fawn coat and accessories to match. After a honeymoon in California, the bride and groom will live in Victoria. Among the many presents received was an electric coffee percolator and Kenwood blankets from the business office staff of The Times, of which the groom is a member, and a wrist watch from the bride's former employer, Mr. J. N. Holland.

STEVENS-PETCH

The marriage took place at St. Barnabas' Church on Thursday evening, Rev. N. E. Smith officiating, when Annie Lillian, only daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Sydney Petch, Hillside Avenue, became the bride of Mr. Cyril Stanley Stevens, son of Mr. and Mrs. Albert Stevens, of Hillside Avenue. The church had been beautifully decorated for the occasion. The bride was given in marriage by her father, and looked charming in a gown of white georgette, with a veil of lace net and a coronet of orange blossoms. Her shower bouquet was of gladioli, white carnations, sweet peas, snapdragons, and bridal roses. She was attended by Miss Margaret Panting, who wore a floral pink crepe back satin frock with a hat to match, and carried a bouquet of gladioli and carnations in shades of pink. Mr. James Burwood was best man. The two little flower girls were May and Jean McKay, nieces of the groom, and their quaint Victoria frocks, one pink and the other blue, were particularly attractive. They wore ribbons in their hair to match their frocks and carried Colonial bouquets. While the register was being signed Mr. Stanley Jewkes sang "I Love You Truly."

A reception was held later, at the home of the groom's sister, Mrs. McKay, Graham Street, where the eighty guests were received by the bride's mother, who wore an ensemble of navy blue silk and hat to match, and a corsage bouquet of gladioli, and by the groom's mother, wearing a gown of pale pink silk crepe and matching hat. Her corsage bouquet blended with the color of her gown. Mr. James Burwood proposed the toast to the bride, after which a buffet supper was served. The bride and groom left for motor tour, the bride wearing a powder-blue ensemble and hat of the same shade. Mr. and Mrs. Stevens will make their home on Lang Street.

BOWARD-CRAIG

A quiet but pretty wedding was solemnized last evening at 8 o'clock at the home of the bride's mother, Mrs. A. E. Craig, 121 Beechwood Avenue, when Rev. E. F. Church, united in marriage her only daughter, Kathleen Victoria May, and Mr. Gordon Howard, 177 Robertson Street. About forty relatives and friends were present. During the ceremony, the bride stood before the flower-banked fireplace in the drawing-room. The bride entered the room on the arm of Mr. A. B. Ward, an old family friend, who gave her in marriage. The wedding march was played by Miss Betty Schwarz, and later, as the register was being signed, Rev. J. H. A. Ward sang "At Dawning." The bride, who wore a simply-fitted, lined frock of ivory satin, and a filmy veil of silk net held to her head with a wreath of orange blossoms, carried a bouquet of red roses, and was attended by Miss Alfreda James, of Vancouver, in a lovely gown of yellow silk crepe, and a hat to match. Her bouquet was of sweet peas and roses. The best man was Mr. Desmond Howard, of Kamloops, brother of the groom. Mrs. Craig welcomed the guests, and wore a smart frock of burnt orange crepe trimmed with lace. The supper table, on which was placed the handsome wedding cake, was arranged with yellow candles in silver holders, and small vases of yellow flowers. Mr. and Mrs. Howard are spending their honeymoon on the Mainland. The bride left in a most becoming frock of yellow satin with silver trimmings, and a grey hat and coat. Out-of-town guests included Miss Ethel McKim and Miss Gwendoline Jackson, of Salmon Arm; Mr. and Mrs. Seymour Howard, of Port Angeles. Mrs. Howard, the bridegroom's mother, wore a gown of powder blue and black crepe. Among the beautiful wedding gifts was a bedroom lamp from the staff of the Metropolitan Sunday school, of which the bride is a teacher.

Had Ovation In Vancouver

Miss Joy Calvert, formerly of Victoria, was the soloist at the last concert of the Vancouver Symphony Orchestra's Summer season in the Marion Malken Memorial Shell, Stanley Park, just a week ago. An audience, estimated at 15,000, was present, and accorded the violinist a tremendous ovation at the close of her number.

Solarium Needs Supply of Jams

The Queen Alexandra Solarium wishes to remind its friends, now that the fruit canning season is here, of the constant need of jam in the home that houses so many children. The requirements are naturally enormous, and, if every housewife, in making up her stores for the winter, could remember to set aside a few jars for the Solarium, the supply of preserves would be very greatly helped. Bottles may be obtained at the Solarium Office, 219 Pemberton Building.

Old at 40? Get back that New Discovery Better

Raw Oysters Good
Don't blame weak, exhausted, peevish condition on your years. Think trouble often comes simply because the body has exhausted its supply of important organic elements.

Doctors once advised raw oysters. Oysters are rich in the blood-making, pep-giving element lacking in many who feel old, weak, peevish, exhausted at 40 or 50. Now a new discovery, OSTREREX is advised. Prepared from raw oysters, government inspected, contains three times as much of the blood-making element as oysters. OSTREREX is a powerful blood-builder, restores vitality, builds up the system. A doctor says: "I have seen a number of cases of this condition, and I believe it is old age while those well supplied with it may feel peevish at 40."

Be red-blooded. Get the pep that makes you feel younger. Bring coupon here today. Get 15 packets OSTREREX at special low price. Take at meals and bedtime. If not satisfied with quick results, make refund price of this package. You don't risk a penny. SPECIAL THIS WEEK 98¢

MYSTERY MAN
IS FROM B.C.Found Unconscious in Boat Near Halifax — Came From Vancouver

HALIFAX, Aug. 25 (CP).—Memory gradually returned, today, to the mysterious young Englishman who, last week, signed on the Nova Scotia fishing schooner Lenarfish as Paul Dewess, of Vancouver, shortly before he was discovered unconscious in a sailboat at George's Island.

Speechless as a result of what doctors believe to be the aggravation of an old head injury by a recent fall, Dewess wrote on a sheet of paper his name as Eric Lygen. Members of the fishing schooner, however, identified him as the man who signed on as Dewess. He scribbled on his pad he had an uncle in Toronto, but was unable or declined to announce the uncle's name.

CULBERTSON on CONTRACT
By Ely Culbertson

World's Champion Player and Greatest Card Analyst

COUNTING ON THE DEFENCE

Many bridge players see almost everything except what is as plain as the nose on Jimmy Durante's face. The reason is apparently a general feeling that certain phases of the game are too mysterious to be tackled by anyone except experts. One such phase is card-rending. For some reason which I do not fully understand, this form of cerebration is regarded by many as on a par with witchcraft and astrology. Actually it is often as simple as seeing Mr. Durante's aforementioned appendage.

Take for example South's count of East's cards in the deal below, through which he was able to defeat East's contract.

East, dealer.
East and West vulnerable.

♠ J 10 7
♥ 9 8 6

♠ A K Q 3
♥ K 10 9
♦ A 10
♣ K 10

The bidding:
East South West North
1♣ Pass 2♠ Pass
2♥ Pass 3♠ Pass
3NT Pass 4♠ Pass

Against the rather optimistic East and West contract of three no trump, South naturally opened his fourth-best spade. A low card was played from dummy, and North played the ten, the declarer winning the trick with the ace. East now played the king of clubs and then the ten, and before deciding whether to finesse or play the ace, he went into a deep study. South took this opportunity to analyze the hand as well as he could. Of course he realized that if West played the ace of clubs his partner's queen would drop, and the contract in that case probably could not be defeated. Accordingly, he based his hope of defeating the contract on the assumption that East would go wrong on his decision in the club suit. South knew that the spade queen was the dummy's only possible card

The Laughing Girl
Mystery
By Viola Partridge

INSTALLMENT XXVI

"There wasn't a sound in the street," Detective Burt told Alby, "when I heard something fall. I was out of the cab, with that kid bumping into me and crying, 'The roof! He'll get away! And I blew my whistle, and Burns, Dixon and McCarty came in about a minute. I left McCarty outside with the kid. Dixon went up to the roof through the hall, and Burns into this apartment. Steve—Mrs. Galloway—came to the door—the back door. And then a second later, Dinard was there, too, barefoot, saying sharp to Mrs. Galloway. 'I'll take care of this. You see if Miss Sayre's all right, and Mrs. Galloway went off, and I made Dinard show me the soles of his feet, but they were clean. 'Some one's been on the roof,' I said. And before I could answer, Mrs. Galloway called, 'Don't let your men spoil the footprints on the roof! Dinard was burning up to get to Miss Sayre. I had to keep him covered with my rod while I placed the headquarters. They sent the photographer and two more men in about ten minutes. Meanwhile Mrs. Galloway had got Miss Sayre out of a faint on the floor. We left the room exactly as it was. Miss Sayre can tell you her part."

Adelaide did. "Now," she begged, "please don't see Mr. Dinard?" Before Alby had time to answer, Burt went on, "The mate to the slipper that was dropped from the roof was Dinard's. The bottom of it is pretty dusty."

Adelaide gave a startled cry. Joe's mouth fell open.

"Go on," Alby ordered.

"Mrs. Galloway's evidence spoils it some. Says from the time they went to bed, she patrolled the apartments. Says she propped Dinard's door open as soon as she thought he'd be asleep. Every ten minutes or so she'd look in. Mrs. Galloway doesn't see how Dinard could have had time to do it and get back into bed and arrange the covers exactly as they were. She was looking at him when we knocked at the door."

"You searched through both empty apartments?"

"Sure. Nothing doing. The fire escape was being watched, and the downstairs door."

"Exactly how long between the time the slipper fell and the time you got into the hall?"

"Two minutes, maybe. Not more."

"Two minutes!"

"No, Mr. Alby. But I had to wait till Burns and the others turned up. I couldn't leave the front of the house unguarded. And that kid there delayed me a few seconds. And the hall door was solid. I rang all the bells, and was trying to break it in, when Coggis shivered out in his nightgown."

"A man then would have had time to get down from the roof through the hall trapdoor into this or any other apartment, in fact even into the basement?"

"Yes, sir. But it don't look like anybody did that. Two slippers, and one of them over the front roof, and one inside the window of Dinard's room."

"It's another plot!" Adelaide cried. "You know it, Mr. Alby!"

"Believe me, Detective Burt ignored her, 'it wouldn't have taken half a minute for Dinard to dash across the roof, drop to the fire escape and get back into bed."

"Well, just what did you see, Joe?"

Joe told just what he had seen: a bent knee and the lower part of the leg and foot, dark against the edge of the roof. And a bit of the bulk of the whole body as it rolled over.

"All right, do your stuff," said Alby. "How tall was the man?"

Joe winced. "If I'd waked up one second earlier I could tell you."

"A fine detective you'd make. Sleeping on your first job. I suppose you were too sleepy to tell how many inches of leg you saw?"

At this moment the doorbell rang. Burt went to the door. "It's Officer McCarty," he reported. "Says a man named Timmott wants his kid."

"Tell him to send Timmott up," said Alby. "He can take his boy home and put him to bed."

"But I've waked up since, Mr. Alby," Joe's words tripped over one another. "I've figured out a way to know how many inches of leg I saw. I know exactly what the knee and the leg and foot looked like. And where their shadow came on the shade. If you'd stuff a black stocking and let me show you on the roof just what angle it stuck out at, and—gee whiz, Mr. Alby, I just thought of something else! Which foot was it the slipper belonged to? Because I could of seen the shape of a heel, if it had been on the foot that stuck out. And anyhow," Joe went on, thinking at lightning speed, "how could he get down from the roof to the wire still in slippers loose enough to come off like that! The window sill's narrow—"

He heard his father's step out in the hall. "Honest, Mr. Alby, I'll stay awake the rest of my life, if you'll just let me show you. Only that shadow business ain't so hot, the moon has moved by now. All the same, I remember just where it came to, not the shadow but the foot—"

"So here you are," Mr. Timmott towered threateningly over Joe.

"It's all right, dad," Joe said. "I was just explaining to the D.A. here—"

"Go on, Joe," said Alby, his hand making a gesture of silence to Mr. Timmott.

"I said I remembered where the foot came to," said Joe. "Only it's not like remembering the way you remember the capital of Oklahoma. I can see it. Like I'd taken a pitcher of K. seel. Like last night, when I remembered how Dennis Swift turned up his hand—"

Joe repeated the gesture, and stopped talking.

Alby looked at Joe shrewdly, and then at his father.

"That boy," said Mr. Timmott, "is just a fresh guy, that's all."

"Wait a minute, Dad. This is important. Mr. Alby, there's something else. If we can figure out exactly how long that man's leg was from the knee down, ain't there some way of telling how tall he'd be?"

"On second thought," said Alby, "I believe I'll borrow this boy of yours for a day or two."

"Oh, boy!" Joe's grin seemed to spread his ears apart.

It was noon when Alby, with Joe in tow, reached his office. "Any word from London?" he asked Harrod at once.

"Not yet. Had a good nap?"

"Fine. Also a hearty lunch. We're set for action as soon as we get the cables."

"Better go upstairs and tell the Big Bosses. The D.A. himself and the police commissioner are waiting for you."

"O.K. Meanwhile Joe can stay here."

Upstairs Alby found not only the district attorney himself and the police commissioner, but Higgins and Stevens. "Even so," Stevens was insisting, "he couldn't have done it. I would have heard him."

The discussion was suspended at Alby's entrance. Higgins was glum. "Seen the morning papers?" he growled.

"Yes," Alby was unperturbed. "Those reporters know almost as much as we do. But not quite."

"If that slipper business leaks, the papers will break out in a rash against us," said the commissioner. "What are you waiting for, anyhow, Alby?"

"The commissioner," explained the district attorney, "says we've got the case in our pocket, A.A. He wants us to make the arrest at once."

"What's the hurry?" said Alby. "The murder was committed only night before last. Even the newspapers would be disappointed if we cut this story short by thing him waiting for commissioner. Is some jury-proof evidence. We'd do better to wait. Any new developments this morning?"

"Two. Both honeys," said Higgins. "Many reports that no inspector went to Coggis' house Tuesday. Number two: There's no doubt that the slippers are Dinard's. The laboratory reports list from his bedroom carpet and also identifies the dust as from the roof. Also a bit of dust not only on the outside but on the inside of both slippers. Oswald, the janitor, reports that he tarred up a leak last week."

Alby whistled. At which Higgins' face lit up. "How about it, A.A.?" said Higgins.

Alby looked off into space. "Tar," he murmured. "Got the slippers handy?"

The district attorney picked up the telephone and gave an order. Then Stevens spoke. "All the same, footprints or no footprints, he couldn't have done it. I was looking right at him when the bell rang. He could not have got down off the roof, removed shoes, stockings, and all traces of foot dust, and got back into bed, in the two minutes between the falling of the slipper and the ringing of the bell."

A man had come in not only with the slippers, but with an afternoon paper. The commissioner and the D.A. exclaimed at the scare headlines, but Alby bent his entire attention upon the slippers.

"You can put those away, Alby," said the commissioner's presence.

"We've no choice now but to arrest Dinard. Read this."

Alby took the paper and read the headlines:

Farewell Party Given in Honor of Miss Martin

The executive of the United Church Presbytery arranged a surprise party at the Oriental Hotel, on Friday evening, in farewell to Miss Martin, who will leave shortly for Eastern Canada. Mrs. W. H. Graham, presbytery president, was in charge of the evening's programme, the following artists taking part: Miss Evelyn Harper played "Ballads" (Brahms), and "Waltz" (Chopin); Mrs. T. H. Johns sang two solos, "La Serenata" (Tosti) and "Why" (Tschakovsky); Mrs. Travis sang "Roadways" (Masefield) and "Bless the House" (Helen Taylor); Mrs. Dorothy Morton Cough played the accompaniments. Mrs. W. G. Wilson, British Columbia Branch president, paid warm tribute to Miss Martin's work and to the high esteem in which she is held by the members of the mission board. She also welcomed Miss Brown, who is to follow Miss Martin. Mrs. Graham read an address, in which was expressed regret at parting with Miss Martin after her years of work in Victoria, her loyalty and devotion to the great missionary cause, ever ready to give of herself, not only to the home, but in coming to the help of the different auxiliaries and thus creating a greater interest among their members.

Mrs. G. D. Christie, who has been a friend of Miss Martin and of the home for many years, presented Miss Martin, on behalf of the members, with a brief case.

Miss Martin, who was taken by surprise by the visitors, who numbered about fifty, expressed her great appreciation of the sympathy and co-operation of the auxiliaries. She paid warm tribute to those who had worked with her, for their love and devotion to the little ones in their care. Mrs. Hood closed the first part of the programme with prayer. During the social hour, refreshments were served by the ladies.

Albion Tribune—Andy Richardson, while visiting his sweetheart, last Sunday, sprained his arm severely and won't be able to use it for ten days.

At a recent trial one of the witnesses was a green countryman, unused to the ways of the law, but quick, as it proved, to understand its principles. After a severe cross-examination the counsel for the prosecution paused, and then, putting on a look of severity, exclaimed: "Mr. Kilkins, has not an effort been made to induce you to tell a different story?"

"A different story from what I told, sir?"

"That is what I mean."

"Yes, sir; several persons have tried to get me to tell a different story from what I have told, but they couldn't."

"Now, sir, upon your oath, I wish to know who those persons are."

"Well, I guess you've tried 'bout as hard as any of them."

There must be something better about a soap, when 20,000 beauty experts recommend it. I expect a beauty expert to know about skin, the way a doctor knows about health! And I tried Palmolive first, just for that reason alone!

I took the advice of those beauty experts, as to method of using Palmolive, too. I massage its velvety lather well into my pores, rinse with warm water, then cold. You can't imagine how that penetrating lather will help your skin!

SPECIAL TRAINING GIVEN CHILDREN IN PRIVATE SCHOOLS

Advantages of Boarding Schools as Against Home Upbringing Are Many—Welfare of Child Must Not Be Subordinated by Sentiment—Health Is of Paramount Importance

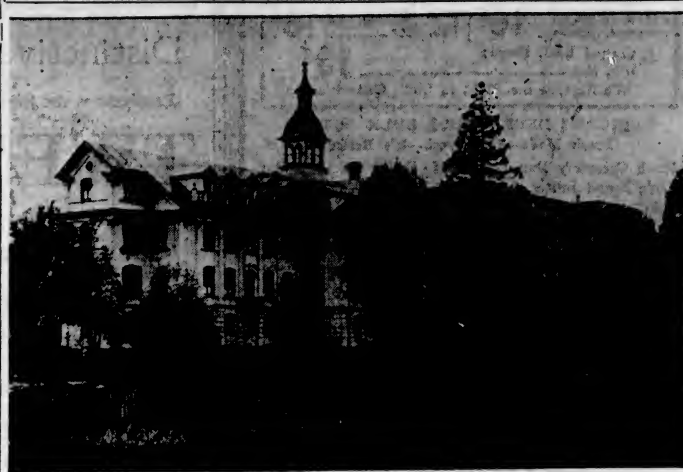

IN many cases, when the age-old subject of child education arises, the parents automatically accept as a foregone conclusion the fact that their children will attend public school. Often this decision is arrived at through financial circumstances which preclude all consideration of a private school for the youngsters, but frequently it is simply that the parents have never inquired into the advantages the children will receive.

It is not sufficient to labor under the theory that "what was good enough thirty years ago is good enough now." Conditions have changed and modern life demands the finest training to equip a young boy or girl in the battle for success.

CHILD'S WELFARE FIRST
One reason often given is that the parents (the mother in particular) are reluctant to let their children go to boarding school. To follow the path of least resistance is always easiest, and public schools are invariably near at hand. Thus the subject of private schools is dismissed without further thought, often with a sigh of relief on the part of the doing parent. But it is essential that the child's welfare must come before sentiment. It is not that home life is undesirable, but that a more impersonal element will aid in the development of character and individuality.

The training of the young is a specialized profession. It is impossible for the parents to devote more than a portion of their time to the care of their children. Private schools are staffed with skilled teachers who, through experience and training, have acquired a knowledge of child psychology. Under their careful supervision the children learn how to work and play in their own small world, carving their own niche in the little community of school life. Away from the home they learn to adjust themselves to the competitive atmosphere of the world they must face later.

Long a Well-Known Girls' School

St. Ann's Academy, a valuable educational institution in Victoria, is typical of the highest standards maintained by the average private school.

HEALTHFUL SITES
Boarding schools are generally situated in the suburbs or in the country. The site is chosen with an eye to health as a paramount consideration. Fresh air, sunlight and beautiful surroundings are essential to the well-being of the child. In the country there is more room, they have scope for play and exercise never offered by the city parks. Organized games have a major place in the building up of mind and body.

The regularity of school life is a factor that cannot be too heavily stressed. Hours for study, hours for play, sleep and liberty are carefully set and strictly adhered to. The child receives the first consideration in the routine of the school to a degree impossible in the average home. There he is more or less incidental to the adult world and suffer through irregularities of meals and sleep.

Private schools are at liberty to adopt a curriculum that is far more embracing than that in the public schools, where they are governed by rules that must apply to thousands of children looked on as a single unit. Instruction in studies such as music and art, elocution and dancing may be specially arranged, thus giving the child an outlet for his other natural bent.

A traveling circus had arrived at a small village, and the vicar, who had been to the circus, saw it as he could be of service. He came across three circus hands sitting alone and very dejected.

"What's wrong?" asked the vicar. "The elephant's dead," volunteered one of the men. "Dead?" said the vicar. "I am sorry. But at the same time I am glad to think that you three men cared so much for a dumb animal."

"Oh, ain't that," explained one of the three. "You see, us chaps 'as got to dig the 'ole to bury 'im."

The academic or pre-college course offers a variety of training in many cultural subjects. The four-year English course is that which is given by the public schools. It includes an extended course in history, as also in literature; the fields of algebra and geometry, as well as chemistry, afford interesting subjects as studies, and serve to strengthen young women's minds; Latin and French are well stressed in the academic grades. The annual examinations serve to check up the work, and matriculation and entrance examinations are required of the pupils when the season for these tests comes around yearly for these sections of the school work.

BUSINESS TRAINING COURSE
The commercial department provides thorough courses in shorthand, typing, penmanship, letter-writing, business arithmetic, book-keeping, and the use of office appliances. The mimeograph for stencil work, the Daltan adding machine, and large equipment for teaching filing systems courses, show that this extra work is emphasized in the department. Graduates of this department have achieved success which has brought prestige to themselves by the positions won in the civil service ranks, banks and business offices in the city and elsewhere. There is an attractive special course for matriculants, the secretarial course.

SPECIAL DEPARTMENTS
The music department at St. Ann's enjoys a strong position in the school and in the city as well. For long years music pupils of the institution have won their own simple share of honors for pianoforte or vocal music at the annual music festivals held by the Board of Adjudicators, London, England. The work of the department is under a staff of trained teachers whose ability is reflected in the success of the pupils year by year.

ART AND ART COURSES
The well-equipped art department at St. Ann's offers a well-balanced curriculum in the standard courses in art, namely, drawing from casts, and life, sketching in local attractive localities, water-color, oil and

TRAINING IS NOW ESSENTIAL

Business Conditions of Today Demand a High Standard of Efficiency

Today, more than ever before, it is essential that the youth or girl who stands on the threshold of a business career be equipped with a specialized knowledge of the work they are about to enter upon. It takes more than perseverance and the will to work for the ambitious youngster to carve out a niche in the wall of success. He or she must be able to bring to the employer qualifications which will enable them to be an asset to the firm or business.

A few years ago a rigorous examination of an applicant for the post of clerk was considered unnecessary. It was sufficient that they picked up the work as they went along. Today conditions are such as to demand a high standard of efficiency from the time they enter the office.

These conditions are met by the establishment of business schools and institutions for specialized training. In many ordinary private schools the child is trained at an early age to the profession in which it is to enter. Many young men and women who had considered themselves through with school are taking advantage of the opportunities offered through night schools or by private tuition in order to fit themselves for higher posts.

Victoria, Vancouver and vicinity is exceptionally well furnished with schools of this calibre, and the large attendance they boast proves the efforts that the young British Columbian is making to overcome the obstacles that present themselves in the road to success.

"Father," said the dramatic critic's son, "what is the difference between a drama and a melodrama?"
"My son," said the wise man simply, "that is easy. In a drama the heroine throws the villain over, and in a melodrama she throws him over a cliff."

Jesuit Order Is Roman Catholic Salvation Army

Quarter-Centenary of Initial Compact of Notable Religious Body Falls on This Month—Society of Jesus Marked by Missionary Zeal and Educational Influence

By Rev. Dr. J. K. UNWORTH

IN the days of long ago, a Spanish soldier of high degree, who had had his leg shattered with a cannon ball, is condescending in Pampluna, the capital of Navarre. His sword and armor hang upon the wall. He calls for chivalrous romances to read, for his mind is all on a fair lady and how he may win her favor. None are to be had and the ardent lover is given instead a Castilian translation of "The Life of Christ," written by a Saxon monk, and the popular story of "The Lives of the Saints."

As he reads and thinks, a struggle goes on in the soul of the soldier between love and the things of the spirit, until, as he lay one night, he saw, as he afterwards wrote, the likeness of the Blessed Virgin and her divine Son. Immediately a loathing seized him against the former deeds of his life and especially of his carnal desires, and there rose up within him a longing and a purpose to imitate the lives of the saints.

Following his resolution to do by the grace of God what they had done, the convert gave away his rich clothes to a beggar and went to a shrine in Montserrat, a peak of the Spanish Pyrenees. Here he laid his sword and armor on the lady altar and kept an all-night vigil before them. Then he went for a period into a cavern, there to spend seven hours a day in prayer and three times a day to scourge his emaciated body. Thus did Ignatius Loyola, the Spanish soldier, take up the whole armor of Christ and enter upon his career as one of the great saints and leaders of the Roman Catholic Church.

Ignatius of Loyola is not so widely known as Italy's lovable saint, Francis d'Assisi, nor, at least in Protestant circles, as his friend and co-worker, Francis Xavier, the flaming missionary of the Orient, but the religious society he founded stands foremost in the thought of the average man. This society is to use the technical name, "Clerks Regular of the Company (or Society) of Jesus." Of all the religious orders, Dominicans, Franciscans, Redemptorists, Jesuits, the name of the Jesuit is written most vividly upon the imagination of the world.

JESUITS IN CANADA Especially is the Canadian mind stored with appealing pictures of the missionary labors of the Jesuit Fathers. This contentment shared with other outposts of the world in the impassioned zeal that drove these devoted of Christ to the far corners of the earth. "Not a cape was turned, nor a river was entered," writes Bancroft, the American historian, but a Jesuit led the way." From the rocky shores of Nova Scotia to the treeless prairies they wandered, and in the heart of souls, paddling all day in their bark canoes, sleeping at night on the bare rock, often dependent for subsistence on acorns or the bark of trees, braving terrible persecutions at the hands of inflamed savages.

The names of such as Brebeuf and Lalemant are written in gold on the background of horrible persecutions that rival the record of the Epistle of the Hebrews. Here is a line or two from the grim narrative: "They cut off his lips, they seared his throat and bleeding gums, they hung a collar of red-hot hatchets around his neck."

The fountain-head of such noble achievements as these was the vision of the wounded Spanish soldier. The lover found then and there a new and better love; the soldier enlisted under a new King and put on "the whole armor of Christ." For years Ignatius pursued himself in training for the service by means of study and pilgrimage and ministry to the needy. At times he earned his livelihood by begging. Having gathered about him six other students in Paris, he met with them, one day, eleven years after his conversion, in the crypt of the Church of St. Mary at Montmartre and there the seven took united vows of poverty and chastity and devoted themselves to the missionary work. That was August 15, 1534, four hundred years ago. Though not formally launched until 1541, when Ignatius was chosen general, the solemn compact in the crypt was the birth of this great religious order.

The soldier-mind of Ignatius is seen in the constitution of the Society. It is a fighting body, a regiment. Its head is a "general," its members swearing unquestioning obedience "to the Father-General, holding the place of God." Above perhaps all other religious bodies within the Catholic Church, the Society of Jesus is marked by absolutism in its discipline.

LIKE SALVATION ARMY In its framework the Society of Jesus resembles the Salvation Army. The modern religionists, who pioneered in the slums of London under William Booth, call themselves soldiers fighting in a war.

SCHOOLBOY ROWE EQUALS AMERICAN LEAGUE MARK

Bill Dale Has Hard Luck in Mile Event at Hamilton Trials

Local Youngster Falls During First Lap to Blow Chances of Gaining Place for Trip to Australia —McPhee and Marshall Limon Outstanding

HAMILTON, Aug. 25 (CP).—Husky Howard McPhee and Marshall Limon, both of Vancouver, garnered most of the spotlight for the boys from the Coast province, when they won the 220-yard and 440-yard events at the track and field trials held here, today, to select a team to represent Canada in Australia this fall.

McPhee, just nosed out of a victory by Andy Ziska, of Toronto, in the century, came back in brilliant fashion to defeat Ziska by three yards in the furlong.

Limon, who came here for the British Empire Games, and has remained since that time, won his victory in a canter.

DALE BLOWS CHANCES

Lanky Bill Dale, of Victoria, fell on the first lap of the half-mile and blew his chances for points, while Gus Kennedy, of Salmon Harbor, was third in the first heat of the 120-yard hurdles, but failed to qualify for the final.

A stiff breeze down track handicapped the speed artists, and not a single new mark was established.

In the shot-put, Eddie Ware, of Calgary, beat the record with a toss of 46 ft. 4-8 in, but the mark was not accepted when it later was learned the ball was two ounces under regulation weight.

Fifteen-year-old Sammy Richardson, Toronto's broad jumping champion of the British Empire, did the expected when he captured the broad jump.

Richardson leaped 22 ft. 1 in. to win the event from C. Rogers, of Brantford. A brisk breeze, however, played a big part in handicapping the competitors.

FAILS AGAIN

Left in the dressing-room when the mile run was staged, A. MacAuley and J. Schuberg, two Vancouver youths, were permitted to try against time in a run-over between themselves. MacAuley, the winner, however, failed to lower the mark of Bob Mitchell, of Toronto, who had won the original event. The Coast boy's time was 4 min. 53 sec., twenty seconds slower than that of Mitchell.

Swedish Track Expert Breaks Discus Record

OSLO, Aug. 25 (AP).—Harold Anderson, of Sweden, bettered the world's record for the discus throw, today, in the course of a track and field meet between Norway and Sweden. Anderson got off a toss of 52.42 metres, or 171 feet 11-8 inches to beat the recognized record by more than two feet.

Anderson's record-breaking feat marks the first time the discus standard has been held outside the United States in at least forty years. The listed world's record of 51.73 metres, or 169 ft. 8-7-8 in., was set by Paul Jesup, former University of Washington athlete, in the United States championships at Pittsburgh, in 1920.

Phyllis Dewar Wins Canadian One-Mile Swim Championship

Moose Jaw Girl Takes Distance Event in Twenty-Nine Minutes and Forty-One Seconds—Marion Moffat, Vancouver, Finishes in Eighth Place

TORONTO, Aug. 25 (CP).—Miss Phyllis Dewar, of Moose Jaw, Sask., tonight won the Canadian women's one-mile swimming championship, and the Barker Gold Trophy. Her time was 29:41.

The Western Canadian girl had a lead of more than seventy-five yards over Dorothy Hobson, of Toronto.

Betty Edwards, of Toronto, was third and Lillian Shields, Toronto, was fourth.

Swimming neck and neck for the entire distance, Miss Hobson finished only a foot ahead of Betty Edwards. Margaret Gribble, of Barrie, was fifth and Miss Catherine O'Brien, of Buffalo, finished sixth.

Marion Moffat, of Vancouver, the lone Pacific Coast entry, finished in eighth place.

Twenty-five mermaids plunged into the cold, choppy water of the Canadian National Exhibition regatta course in quest of the trophy.

The water was 61 degrees and a westerly wind blew down the course against the swimmers. Miss Dewar, British Empire champion at 100 and 400 yards, was joint favorite with Miss Irene Pirie, of Toronto Dolphins.

There were only two entrants from the United States, Catherine O'Brien and Jean M. Seager, both of the Buffalo Women's Aquatic Club, Buffalo.

Diamond Button Fish Hooked by Everett Woman

LANDING a sixty and one-half pound salmon, yesterday morning, at Campbell River, Mrs. W. C. Butler, of Everett, earned for herself the diamond button presented by the Tyee Club. It is the second button of its kind ever to be won by members of the club. Dr. J. A. Wilborn, of Avalon, Catalina Island, gaining this distinction in 1920, when he hooked a sixty-three and one-half pound fish. The button goes to anglers landing a salmon weighing over sixty pounds. A. N. Wolverton, of Vancouver, caught a gold button fish this morning, when he hooked a fifty-pounder. According to reports from Campbell River, it took Mrs. Butler about an hour to get her prize alongside the boat. Robert Love, 1016 Pembroke Street, was among the fortunate, this morning, and succeeded in hooking a forty-three pound fish, which entitles him to a silver button.

SCORES SIXTEENTH STRAIGHT VICTORY AGAINST SENATORS

Twenty-Two-Year-Old Pitching Ace of Detroit Tigers Ties Record Made by Joe Wood, Walter Johnson and Bob Grove—Drives in Winning Run—Yanks Split—Cubs Move Up

WASHINGTON, Aug. 25 (AP).—Laywood (Schoolboy) Rowe recorded his sixteenth consecutive pitching victory today, to equal the American League record, as Detroit Tigers defeated Washington, 4-2. Rowe knocked in the winning run in a three-run ninth-inning rally started by Hank Greenberg's homer.

The record was established in 1912 by "Smoky" Joe Wood, of Boston; equaled in the same year by Walter Johnson, of Washington, and in 1931 by "Lefty" Bob Grove, of Philadelphia Athletics. The major league mark of nineteen straight is held jointly by Timothy Lincecum and Rube Marquard, of New York, in the National League.

Uphill Battle

Rowe was touched for nine hits in winning his sixteenth game of the streak which began on June 15 with a victory over Boston. He had to fight an uphill battle until the last inning, with Monte Weaver opposing him on the hill. Then Greenberg tied the score with his homer, Marvin Owen and Pete Fox singled to put the winning run on third and Rowe drove it home with a single. A third run was scored on an infield out, and Rowe bore down in the last half of the inning to strike out the last two batters, Pinch Hitters Dave Harris and Cecil Travis, with one man on base.

Second Game—R. H. E. Detroit 4 12 3 Washington 2 9 1 Batteries—Rowe and Cochrane; Weaver and Bolton.

EXPLANATION FOR YESTERDAY'S RIPLEY CARTOON

Through a North Sea Storm in a Barrel—The flair to accomplish the bizarre and impossible is ever present in the people of all nations—walking across continents, sailing oceans alone, or being buried alive for weeks at a time. A new and curious stunt, which just came to my attention from Rotterdam, was undertaken in May when Hein Schipperoot built a boat out of an ordinary barrel, equipped it with sails, and then set out for England. Sailing from Schiedam, the daring sailor had good luck until he reached Hook of Holland, where he was enveloped in a severe North Sea storm for twenty-four hours, finally landing at the harbor of Scheveningen, forty miles from his port of departure, thankful to have come through the ordeal with his life.

The Champion Newspaperman—On his thirtieth birthday, Charles Bryan had worked for 550 different newspapers and publishing companies—all over the United States, Canada, Mexico, Honduras and Nicaragua. Bryan's numerous publishing ventures took him through almost all departments of newspaper work—reporter, advertising salesman, linotype operator, printer, pressman, stereotyper, engraver—and, believe it or not, he was discharged only four times.

Former Sprints to Half-Mile Win Against Chuck Cunningham—Latter Takes Century and Rowe Breezes Through in 220—Margaret Thompson Takes Women's 100 Yards

WELCOMED Y MAYOR
As the parade halted, Mayor David Leeming addressed a few words of welcome to the visiting athletes. He welcomed the team as the city's representative and as the torchbearer of the Olympic flame. Leeming, a former member of Canada's track and field team at the recent Empire meet at London. The city's chief magistrate concluded by presenting the athletes with a small bag, the gift of his many admirers. The feature of the meet was Addison's fine running in the half-mile, which he won with ease. Leeming, Y.M.C.A. and holder of the British Columbia championship, and the victory of Paul Rowe, of the team in the yards event. Making an ideal lead, Rowe headed Addison's team out in front.

Kilner was close to the pace-setter all of the way, but Porter, Chamaus, and the runner from the runners made the last turn for home. Kilner came again and beat out the Chamaus runner in a great stretch duel which drew the heaviest applause.

TAKEN WOMEN'S EVENT
Showing her heels to the remainder of the large field, Margaret Thompson, red-headed, fair sex spring star from Nanaimo, literally won the women's 100 yards dash, finishing seven yards in front of Virginia Hall, speedy Y.M.C.A. ace, who was second. The Dingy runner was a close third. The remainder of the field was bunched, yards behind the

FENCE VIEWERS ARE JUSTIFIED

Drainage Rights and Not Politics Reason for Nanaimo Appointments

On the word of Hon. G. S. Pearson, Minister of Mines, Labor and Commissioner of Fisheries, there is no political significance in reappointment of "fence viewers" in the Nanaimo area.

"Fence viewers," it develops, are an old established custom in the Province, but have nothing to do with political fences, which come under the heading of organization. In the Nanaimo area, thus, three "fence viewers" acted for the Province for the last twenty-five years. Mr. Pearson states. Their chief duty is to serve as a volunteer board of arbitration, largely in connection with boundary disputes affecting property rights. Nominally their reward is $4 a day while actually arbitrating, but not otherwise.

DRAINAGE ISSUE

Differences arising over drainage of a certain ditch in Nanaimo district which bounded several properties led to Government dissatisfaction with the work of former incumbents of the office, Mr. Pearson explains. Three former "fence viewers" were removed, and three others put in their places.

Of the new appointees, none were selected for their political leanings, and one, at least, subscribes to doctrines that have little in common with Liberalism, the minister asserts.

The Government settled the question of drainage (in this case), by clearing out the ditch with the aid of relief labor.

DECIDE ON NEW SHOPPING HOURS

Courtesy Merchants Come to Agreement—Will Ask City to Amend Regulations

COURTENAY, Aug. 25.—The retail section of the Courtenay-Cornox Board of Trade, met under the chairmanship of William Rickson, in the City Hall, on Friday night, when the matter of business hours for local stores was reopened. A letter from George R. Mathews, of the British Columbia Board of Retail Merchants' Association of Canada, was read.

After some discussion, the secretary of the local board pointed out that the hours of employees was a matter for each employer to decide; but in any case the act provided that no employee shall work more than forty-eight hours a week or more than ten hours on Saturdays.

He thought it would be only fair to the general public if the merchants decided on a definite time to open and close.

By a bare majority of votes it was decided on the following business hours: Monday, Tuesday, Thursday and Friday, 8 a.m. to 5:30 p.m.; Wednesday, 8 a.m. to 11 o'clock noon; Saturday, 8 a.m. to 10 p.m. The city will be asked to amend the local Shops Act to conform to the merchants' wishes, and the Provincial Police to rigidly enforce these hours and to prosecute any offender.

Mickey was an apprentice in a shipyard, and the first morning the foreman put a two-foot rule into his hand and told him to go and measure a large steel plate. He returned in twenty minutes.

"Well, Mickey," said the foreman, "what is the size of the plate?"

A satisfied grin stole over Mickey's face.

"It's just the length of this rule," he replied, "and two thumbs over."

"With this brick, and the breadth of my hand, and my arm from here to there, bar the finger."

He will stay at the Empress Hotel during his visit.

What Today Means

"VIRGO"

If August 26 is your birthday, the best hours for you on this date are from 10:30 a.m. to 12:30 p.m., from 2:30 to 4:30 p.m., and from 7:30 to 9:30 p.m. The danger periods are from 6:30 to 8:30 a.m., from 5:30 to 7:30 p.m., and from 9:30 to 11:30 p.m.

You may find today, after you have decided on an idea or plan of action, that a relative or friend may try and convince you that you do not really know your own mind. If after listening to the pros and cons advanced you are still positive your thought is a good one, it might be good judgment to stick to it. This Sunday a kindly expression of sentiment on the part of a friend may brighten your day considerably. Before the day passes you may be thoroughly convinced that this world is a mighty good one to live in, despite petty trials and tribulations. It might be advisable to remember that personal appearance is frequently judged to indicate individual habits of neatness. A person whose opinion is largely influenced by outward show may visit or meet you, so a little care exercised when dressing may not be a bad idea. Venus may smile indulgently on all true lovers today, whether married or single, so you should be safe to make love to your heart's complete content.

If a woman and August 26 is your natal day, cultivate the habit of keeping up with recent books and events, so you may readily enter into any discussion or conversation regarding topics of the day. Overcome any feeling of diffidence you may feel when being entertained by forcing yourself to be alert and taking an active part in the general talk. You probably have far more grey matter than the average person you meet socially, or in business. You are capable of expressing yourself not only well, but humorously, so there is no reason for you to allow some other person to get all the limelight. Your temperament fits you best for work of an educational nature, office detail or research work and writing. You should make a splendid housewife and always be the first in your husband's affection, for he will probably place you on a pedestal high above all others.

The child born on August 26 may, as it grows up, prove to have few faults and many virtues. It probably will never be a perfect saint, nor an offensive sinner.

If a man and August 26 is your birth anniversary, good luck should follow your steps. Your luck may, like the sun, every once in a while disappear under a cloud, but it should never be hidden long. In love's grab-bag you should draw a rare prize.

MONDAY, AUGUST 27

"VIRGO"

If August 27 is your birthday, the best hours for you on this date are from 9:15 to 11:15 a.m., from 1:15 to 3:15 p.m., and from 6:15 to 8:15 p.m. The danger periods are from 7:15 to 9:15 a.m., from 3:15 to 5:15 p.m., and from 8:15 to 10:15 p.m.

It might be advisable to exercise a great deal of care in making business decisions on this date. Be cautious in your dealings with strangers. There is a possibility of a money-making opportunity coming your way, which you may overlook unless you keep both eyes wide open. It might prove a good policy to avoid forming an alliance with a business competitor, if such a thing is suggested, for the purpose of negotiating a transaction involving a considerable amount of money. Social activities should be confined to inexpensive forms of entertainment, otherwise criticisms which might hurt may follow if lavishness is indulged in. Married and engaged couples will display good reasoning by showing consideration for one another's pocketbook—in which both should be mutually interested—by not suggesting any form of expenditure requiring unreasonable expense.

If a woman and August 27 is your birthday, your unusually active mentality requires an absorbing subject to keep it occupied. If you will specialize on some particular subject you may find it will provide material sufficient for numerous articles suitable for either magazine or newspaper publications. Historical research work might prove a wonderful field of activity, and the knowledge gained might be turned into hard cash, if converted into romantic historical tales. You should be very fortunate in the selection of a mate, and your domestic life should be productive of a great deal of happiness, providing you do not allow "in-laws" to interfere.

The child born on August 27, as it grows up, may display vivid imaginative powers, which should be encouraged. With the proper training this child eventually might occupy an important place among the recognized writers of its time.

If a man and August 27 is your natal day, the painter's brush or the pen should prove the instruments through which fame might be gained. Endowed with a versatile brain, you should have an unlimited fund of interesting subjects to draw from, which should enable you to be an entertaining speaker. If you seek happiness in domestic affairs, avoid consulting anyone regarding them, excepting your wife. In financial matters you should prosper, providing you avoid speculative ventures.

Infantile Paralysis

Health Service of the Canadian Medical Association and the Life Insurance Companies in Canada

When we use the term "infantile paralysis," we are perpetuating a mistake made by giving a name to a disease which is not limited to children and in which paralysis does not always occur. The correct name for the disease is poliomyelitis, which means an inflammation of certain parts of the spinal cord. As in most of the other communicable diseases, sporadic cases of infantile paralysis may occur at all times of the year. In this country epidemics of poliomyelitis reach their height in the late summer or early autumn. In the southern hemisphere, epidemics occur at the time of year which is late summer in that part of the globe during our winter.

The cause of poliomyelitis is a virus, or living agent, which is so minute that it cannot be seen even with the aid of the most powerful microscope, and it passes through filters which eliminate the ordinary disease-producing germs. Nevertheless, it is possible for the scientists in our laboratories to grow this virus and study its behavior.

As far as we know, the disease is limited to human beings, so we conclude that it is spread from person to person. The virus is found in the secretions of the nose and throat.

The virus is found not only in the nose and throat of those who are suffering from the disease, but also in the nose and throat of apparently well persons who never show any evidence of the disease. Such persons are known as carriers. There are carriers also of diphtheria, typhoid fever and other communicable diseases. Undoubtedly the carrier is responsible for the spread of the disease in many cases.

Following exposure to the virus, there is a period of from three to eight days before the appearance of symptoms. Then, if the virus has gained control of the body, there occurs the pre-paralytic stage of the disease, in which the symptoms are a stiff neck, felt when an effort is made to touch the chest with the chin, headache, drowsiness and vomiting. These symptoms may be, and often are, so slight as to escape notice. Many cases recover at this point; others go on into the paralytic stage. The importance of recognizing the pre-paralytic stage is in its being in this stage that convalescent serum may be given. Whatever value the serum has depends on its early use. If paralysis does occur, its crippling effects are minimized by proper rest and relaxation of the muscles as long as pain and fever persist. It is only after that period that exercise and massage are employed to restore the power and use of the muscles.

Many Visitors Are Charmed by Beauty Of Duncan District

Lake and Seaside Resorts Are Within Easy Reach—Fishing, Sports and Scenic Beauty Well Known to All—Running the River Is Novel Experience

DUNCAN, forty-five miles from Victoria on the Island Highway, is one of the most picturesque little cities on the entire scenic route to the north of the Island. Through the fact that it is but a short two-hour drive from the capital, it is a favorite stop for lunch for those who are driving leisurely with the object of taking in as much of the different points of scenic beauty as possible.

The finest of accommodation is offered, both for those who wish a quick meal or for the traveler who wishes to stay overnight.

SCENES NEAR DUNCAN

Duncan is the turning point for those who wish to visit Maple Bay, where a lovely beach, good accommodation and lovely scenery awaits them. The road from Duncan turns across the railway tracks and passes through a residential district en route. About five miles further on it dips down with surprising suddenness to reach Maple Bay. This is a landlocked sheet of salt water, sheltered and warm. The spreading trees from which it derives its name make a fine showing along the shore. Boats may be had for a row or for the fishing enthusiast, for salmon and grilse take well in the bay. Bathing is warm and safe for children.

Duncan also forms the headquarters for trains and stages leaving for Cowichan Lake, twenty-one miles distant. The road to the lake leaves the highway some three miles from Duncan and plunges into the heart of wild country. The road is in excellent shape and no major hills are to be found. It reaches Cowichan Lake at the Southern end, where the Cowichan River empties the body of water and goes winding away to the sea. Fine trout fishing is to be had both in the river and the lake. Boats and launches are available for parties who wish to explore far afield, for the lake extends far back into the hills.

DOWN THE RIVER

Many visitors make the trip down the river to the sea in an Indian dug-out canoe, native guides and outfits being easily obtained. Few experiences can equal the venture, which includes running some very stable rapids, while on both sides the river bank forms picturesque and beautiful scenery. It is not so many years ago that the river was the only means of reaching the lake, and for centuries the Indians annually made the wearisome journey upstream from the sea in order to obtain special needs needed in the manufacture of baskets and mats. These two beautiful spots, of widely different types and directions, are not alone in making Duncan the centre of an ideal vacation ground. The town forms the centre of a rich farming district, and woods and fields are on all hands. Cowichan Bay, four miles from the Victoria side of Duncan, is famous for its fishing. Crofton is another bay, an old deserted smelter town, which is rapidly becoming widely known for its lovely beaches and warm bathing.

WRITER ORDERED OUT OF GERMANY

Mrs. Sinclair Lewis Draws Wrath of Secret Police—Given Day to Leave Country

BERLIN, Aug. 25 (AP).—Mrs. Sinclair Lewis, who writes under her maiden name of Dorothy Thompson, today was ordered by the secret police to leave Germany within twenty-four hours.

The banishment order against the wife of the Nobel Prize winner, was based on her alleged hostile attitude toward Germany.

Mrs. Lewis recently has written many magazine articles on Germany and the Hitler movement. It was privately reported an interview with Hitler, which she published in a magazine before he came to power, had much to do with the expulsion order.

ISSUES STATEMENT
Following receipt of the expulsion order, Mrs. Lewis issued a statement in which she said she was informed that the order "was based chiefly upon an interview with Hitler, which I had in 1931, and which, apart from quoting Hitler, was purely a personal impression of personality."

"I should like to point out," she said, "that it was written some time before Hitler became Chancellor, and when he did not enjoy the support of more than 35 per cent of the German people, so that it is difficult to see how an adverse impression at that time could be interpreted as an attack on Germany."

ISLAND INN FINE RESORT

Caters to Fishermen—Sport Is Excellent in Cowichan Bay

Fishing is good in Cowichan Bay, and sportsmen from all parts of the country are turning their thoughts to this attractive spot. Just thirty-eight miles from Victoria, Cowichan Bay lies right on the Island Highway and offers some of the finest sport and recreation facilities to be obtained anywhere. The Island Inn, situated at the head of the bay, just where the road swings at a sharp angle to pass the Cowichan Tennis Courts, stands well back from the road in secluded grounds of its own. Here comfortable accommodation is offered in the big house, and delicious home-cooked meals are served. Bearing in mind the needs of the fishermen, the management makes a feature of meals designed to suit the sportsman. Early morning is a favorite time for fishing, and a breakfast is served those who wish to make a start before dawn, while others who come back late in the evening will be sure of finding delicious fare awaiting them.

There is a golf course only four miles away, bathing is excellent, and a fine stable of riding ponies is maintained. Boats and launches are available, and a guide will accompany fishing parties if desired.

Exports rose from $133,993,000 in the first seven months of 1933, to $171,745,000 in 1934, while imports rose from $71,645,000 to $83,115,000.

A wife who wished to give her husband a birthday present brought home a sample cigar and watched him light it.

"Well, James," she said, after a little while, "do you like it?"
"Pretty good," he said, with as much enthusiasm as he could muster.
"Some sheep on the road," explained the driver.
Ten minutes later there was another hold-up. "Dash it," cried the driver. "I've caught up with those sheep again."

LAKE IDEAL FOR HOLIDAY

Shawnigan Easily Reached From City—Bracing Air and Warm Swimming

With the glorious weather that has been ours for the past few weeks, the thoughts of all turn every week-end to the inviting beaches and cool waters within easy reach of the city. There are few places more attractive than Shawnigan Lake, thirty miles away by good road, and holding every facility for sport and recreation.

Shawnigan Lake is reached via the famous Malahat Drive, with the alternative of making a short cut through a branch road that leads off close to the summit. The lake itself is seven miles in length and is some three hundred feet above sea level, thus combining all the advantages of the seaside resort in the matter of aquatic sports with the beautiful, invigorating air of the mountains. It is well protected from prevailing winds by the surrounding hills, and the shores are lined with shady maples, alders and thickets of pine.

A MODERN HOTEL
Right on the edge of the lake stands The Forest Inn, a modern and up-to-date hotel in every respect, and set in surroundings of picturesque beauty. At the hotel there is a splendid beach, with a sandy sloping shore that is safe for children, with diving floats and boards for others. Tennis courts are close at hand, and a machine nine-hole golf course gives an interesting game. For those in search of perfect quiet and rest The Forest Inn offers an ideal holiday, with private suites boasting verandas overlooking the water, where meals may be served if desired. A recent innovation is the bi graft on which

FINDS ACT WAS WILFUL OFFENCE

Magistrate Finds L. E. Clarke $100 for Breaking Window in Store

In the City Police Court yesterday morning, Magistrate Jay disposed of the charge against Leonard E. Clarke, inflicting a fine of $100 or two months in jail, with an order that the damage to the window broken by the accused, amounting to $35.50 in all, should be borne by the accused.

In passing judgment, the court reviewed the case, stating that he could not accept the argument put forward by Stuart Henderson on behalf of the accused, that the latter did not know what he was doing, or in other words, was unconscious of his act when he broke the window in the Piggy Wigly store. The magistrate said he could reach no other conclusion than that the deed was a wilful one.

Plays and Players

Brilliant Comedy With Crosby at the Dominion

Paramount's grand new starring combination, Bing Crosby and Miriam Hopkins, got off to an auspicious start in the hysterically funny and audacious film version of the season's smash stage hit, "She Loves Me Not," which opened at the Dominion Theatre, Friday.

Without losing one whit of the delightful speed or humor which characterized the original stage production, the film details the ludicrous adventures that overtake a group of Princeton students when they attempt to shield a little night club dancer from the police and gunmen by hiding her in their dormitory.

Before the uproar subsides, the dean has been knocked out and forced to pose with the dancer, Bing Crosby loses his fiancée and wins the dean's daughter, everybody is threatened with expulsion and finally reinstated, and the film closes with all happy except the disgruntled gunman who is stuck behind bars.

Crosby and Kitty Carlisle, who plays the dean's daughter, join in several duets with the new hit tunes by Ralinger and Robin, and Gordon and Revel.

In Capitol Production

Colin Clive and Virginia Bruce in a Scene From "Jane Eyre," the Feature Attraction at the Capitol Theatre.

Authentic Film Version Of Novel at the Capitol

Charlotte Bronte's famous novel, "Jane Eyre," came to the screen of the Capitol Theatre, yesterday, in one of the most faithfully portrayed versions of any classic that has been turned out by the Hollywood producers.

Preserving the full, rich flavor of the popular story, "Jane Eyre" is the engrossing tale of a little orphan girl, who finds happiness in the work while working on the estate of a wealthy home.

She meets and falls in love with Mr. Rochester, the English gentleman, who has retained her to instruct his young niece, and she is about to be married when events transpire that sends her fleeing from the house, to eventually take up charity work as the assistant to a cold-blooded clergyman. Once again she is about to marry—this time to devote her life to missionary work in India, when by another and more fortunate circumstance, she returns once again to her first love.

"Wonder Bar," With Al Jolson, Is Lively Comedy-Drama With Locals in Paris

No makeup specialist has ever been able to put blackface makeup on Al Jolson to the actor's satisfaction. When it comes time for the comedian to don burnt cork and a wool wig he shuts himself up in his dressing-room and does it himself.

After more than twenty years of practice, Jolson can put on or take off the black makeup at a record-breaking speed. He dislikes to do it, but has become resigned to the public's demand that he appear at least once in every stage and screen production in blackface.

In "Wonder Bar," his latest First National picture, showing at the Empire Theatre, in which he appears with Dolores Del Rio, Kay Francis, Dick Powell, Ricardo Cortez, and Hal LeRoy, he sings one song and works through one sequence in what he calls "the dark." He demonstrated his old-time speed with the cork while working on this sequence, a speed which enabled him when playing blackface roles on the stage, to appear in the finale in white face and formal clothes.

"Wonder Bar" is the internationally famous musical drama in which Al Jolson starred for two years on the American stage. The picture is set amid the gay revelries of a Parisian night club, with spectacular music and dances.

The cast, each member superb in his or her part, was wisely chosen. Robert Montgomery is as daring in the thrilling prison escape scene as he is romantic. Madge Evans portrays the role of an independent chorine with charm, feeling and convincing characterization.

Ted Healy and his three madcap stooges are hilarious in their "straight" character roles.

One of the outstanding football stars of recent years was Johnny Mack Brown, who is now appearing on the screen of the Playhouse Theatre in a featured role of the stirring Universal gridiron drama, "Saturday's Millions," with Robert Young, Leila Hyams, Andy Devine, Lucille Lund, and other well-known players. Several years ago Brown was a halfback on the championship team of the University of Alabama.

COLUMBIA OFFERS NEWSPAPER FILM

Lee Tracy Stars in "Advice to the Lovelorn"—"The Merry Frinks" Added Feature

There is a full-fledged earthquake in "Advice to the Lovelorn," Lee Tracy's current starring vehicle for Joseph M. Schenck and Darryl Zanuck's Twentieth Century Pictures, showing tomorrow at the Columbia Theatre.

Its rhythm and duration were copied from seismographic records of the quake that hit Southern California, March 10 last, and were accurately reproduced in the film by W. R. Davidson, expert in technical effects.

"Advice to the Lovelorn" is the story of a wise-cracking reporter on a Los Angeles newspaper, whose editor punishes him for sleeping through an earthquake and missing the biggest story of the year by denoting him to the post of "agony" column pilot.

Sally Blane is seen opposite Tracy, while others who are prominently cast in his support are Isabel Jewel, Paul Harvey, Judith Wood, and May Boley. Sterling Holloway, C. Henry Gordon, Jean Adair, Matt Briggs, Charles Levinson, Adalyn Doyle and Etienne Girardot complete the cast.

Also on the same bill is "The Merry Frinks."

Two American card-sharks were discussing business on an Atlantic trip.

"Do you have much luck at the game?" one asked.

"Sure," one responded the other.

"Why, one time I held five aces in a poker game and only got shot through the foot."

SOCIAL WORKERS MUST HAVE TACT

Relief Work Skillfully Handled by Experienced Members of Charity Organizations

The social service work being done by the Friendly Help Welfare Association, and its sister organization in Oak Bay, Esquimalt and Saanich is such that it cannot be brought very often before the general public. A number of the cases are extremely difficult to handle, and it requires the utmost tact on the part of the investigators to learn all the details and patch up, as much as possible, troubles of an unfortunate family.

The family department is one of the busiest at the association's headquarters at 1224 Pandora Avenue. This department endeavors to restore families to self-dependence, both economically and physically.

The Burton Sisters, Who Are Appearing on the Stage of the Empire Theatre, Thursday, Friday and Saturday of This Week, in "The Burton Sisters' Revue."

Experienced case workers are employed for this purpose, and they try to help the families understand the root of their difficulties.

Marital discord, juvenile delinquency, ill health (both mental and physical), unemployment and bad housing are a few of the problems dealt with since the Friendly Help Welfare Association came into being last year. A total of 981 families received assistance from the family department last winter.

It is to aid such yeoman work among the unfortunate families of Greater Victoria that the officers of the Friendly Help Societies in Greater Victoria will make an appeal for $50,000, starting October 15.

Stock and Bond Prices Advance At Wall Street

NEW YORK, Aug. 25 (AP).—Stocks and other markets continued to reflect in quiet trading today, a mild revival of improved sentiment. The share market made some further progress on the rise which started early in the week. Bonds, including United States Government issues, were mostly firm, and grains scored a moderate advance.

Hopes of a seasonal upturn in business after Labor Day, brought additional buying of a cautious nature into stocks but the week-end news was devoid of any convincing evidence of expansion in industry. The Cuban trade pact focused interest chiefly on sugar shares. Reduction in the tariff on Cuban sugar apparently had been discussed as a bullish influence, for gains of Cuban American sugar and other Cuban producers were limited to fractions. On the other hand, shares of domestic beet sugar companies were sold on the prospect the Cuban product would be in a stronger competitive position. Great Western sugar closed 2-1/4 points lower.

July foreign trade statistics showed the dollar value of American exports, in contrast with the volume of domestic industrial production, maintained a substantial lead over last year, although much of the increase was attributed to higher prices rather than expansion in the actual dimensions of trade. Small gains predominated in the share list at the finish. The Standard Statistics Company average for ninety stocks moved up 1-10 of a point to 75.7, a new top on the recovery from the low levels of July 26.

Turnover amounted to 436,700 shares, compared with only 164,000 last Saturday.

On moderate trading volume the bond market today increased the gain established yesterday. Low-priced rail issues continued in favor.

They All Agree

"Oil seepage are in general regarded as the most conclusive and direct surface indication of the presence of oil in any field. THE AMOUNT OF OIL WHICH IS ENCAPSULATED AT EACH CHECK IS CONSIDERABLE. As emphasized by Hume, economical flow of gas are perhaps even more impressive, indicating a reserve volume under pressure. The oil seepage of Hume and Kishnawa Creek ARE LOCATED ALONG THE CREST OF AN ANTICLINAL FOLD, WHICH ARE ADDITIONAL EVIDENCE THAT THEIR SOURCE LIES IN A BUILDING POOL UNDER HIGH GAS PRESSURE."

Virginia Vane Says:

WIFE MUST PROTECT HUSBAND FROM HIS WEAKNESS

Dear Virginia Vane—I have been married for twenty years and still love my husband. We have one child, nineteen years old. During our marriage, my husband has had several affairs with other women. I have forgiven him always and taken him back when his interest in the others had worn off.

But now he is in love with a young girl and the affair seems more serious than all the others. I have been a special friend to her and she hates to hurt me, but her love for my husband is deep enough to enable her to go against her own conscience.

He says he cannot stay away from her. He also says he still loves me. He is kind and sweet to me, takes care of my invalid mother, and says that if we should ever separate he will always care for me financially. At present he wants to go away and be entirely by himself, in order to decide which of us he loves best. I wish you would give me your advice on this.—Unhappy Wife.

If it is possible for your husband to take a trip, then it is equally possible for you to go away for a while—and I think this is advisable.

Your husband wouldn't necessarily be able to come to a definite decision, because he'd taken himself and his problem off to some quiet place where there would be infinite opportunities for brooding.

But he might conceivably arrive at some conclusion if he stayed home and found out what life meant without the companionship and help and understanding of a wife who had stood by him for twenty years. Very often the philandering husband associates his wife so much with his home and his comfort that he is incapable of thinking of her as a human being at all. She's part of the household—and that's that.

Let her go away and she realizes that although his home is all around him, comfortable and secure, it has lost the spirit which gave it meaning and life. He is able then to realize what his wife has meant to him as a woman—not just as a pleasant household convenience.

Because you have been able to forgive him so often before, Unhappy Wife, it is obvious that your love for your husband has a strong maternal flavor about it. And you could therefore be happy if you felt that your own action had pushed him into a marriage which was unsuitable and unsafe.

That is why you must make every effort to bring him to his senses. You yourself couldn't stand the spectacle of his unhappiness even though your final separation from him might bring you some relief from humiliation and suspense.

So give him his chance. Go away yourself and let him live without you. Let him fight out his problem right on home ground, where he will be reminded of how much you have always meant to him. Let him have the experience of being free to see his new love—and let him discover whether this freedom is, after all, his true happiness.

Only a brave and tolerant woman could take such a step. But you have always been brave and tolerant through twenty years of marriage, and since your first concern is the happiness of your husband and child, you must make one final effort to keep your home together.

Mrs. G. P.: I have considered your problem very carefully indeed and feel that you cannot go on sacrificing your life for the sake of a man who can never be anything but a bit of human wreckage.

You see, just so long as he hangs about your neck like the Ancient Mariner's albatross, you yourself can not be a useful nor self-respecting member of society. You cannot even help the man for whose sake you are struggling and striving, since your bitterness and resentment color your attitude toward him and have a decidedly bad influence on him.

Why not make some attempt to bring his children to a sense of their filial responsibility? If they were willing to contribute to his support, you would be relieved of the full burden. If they will not co-operate, you must, I am afraid, harden your heart and rid yourself of an encumbrance which is making it almost impossible for you to support yourself.

Try to realize that I am not advising a hard-boiled course of action. The facts are plain. You must support yourself, and your husband is deliberately wrecking your chances of being a steady wage earner. You must somehow attain a normal state of mind again and you cannot do this under the present circumstances.

And, above all, you cannot do anything but harm to the man who is deteriorating into a shiftless loafer, content to live on you and your earnings.

Your protection is weakening him mentally and morally. Let him stand on his own feet and try to find his manhood again.

How It Started

By JEAN NEWTON

"TO FRY IN ONE'S OWN GREASE"

When a man falls into a trap he set for others or becomes enmeshed in a nefarious web of his own weaving.

ing, then, figuratively speaking, he fries in his own grease. This expression is not modern slang, ultra though it sounds. Indeed, it was in general circulation in the time of Heywood, who wrote during the latter part of the Sixteenth Century. Its earliest recorded use is by Geoffrey Chaucer, who two hundred years before Heywood, in The Reves Tale, put it in the form: "In his own grece I made him frye."

Your Health and Your Weight

CHILDREN SHOULD INCREASE IN WEIGHT AT ALL AGES
By JAS. W. BARTON, M.D.

In the physical examination of students in preparatory and other schools, the height and weight are always taken, as a boy or girl that doesn't increase in height and weight from September to the following May is not progressing in the normal manner.

At certain periods there may be but little gain in height—7 to 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, with real increase from 12 to 14 or 15 to 16.

However, in the matter of weight, despite the age, particularly up to 15 and 16, there should always be a substantial increase in weight from September to May. "Children should not remain stationary in weight but should be making consistent gains in weight throughout the growth period."

At what rate should children be gaining weight, if the food is furnishing plenty of vitamins, building materials and calories to make the best possible gains, and there are no physical defects, infections or injurious health habits to hold them back from making normal gains?

Dr. Jean Bogert, Kansas State Agricultural College, has compiled a table gathered from various sources, which represents the average figures from weighing a great many apparently normal children. Thus for boys 2 to 4 years of age the average gain in weight should be 5 1/2 pounds per year; 4 to 12 years, average gain should be 5 pounds per year; 12 to 14, 9 pounds a year; 14 to 16, 12 pounds a year; 16 to 18, 6 pounds per year.

For girls 2 to 3 years of age, 5 1/2 pounds; 4 to 8 years, 5 pounds per year; 11 to 14, 9 pounds per year; 14 to 16, 6 pounds per year; 16 to 18, 3 pounds per year.

The tables in full show that the periods of most rapid growth are (1) during the first year, after which the rate of growth grows less through the second and third years.

Effective Bait for Control of Earwigs
Insects Extending Range of Activities in Search of Food and Water During Warm Spell

Earwigs have been more numerous in Victoria and throughout the Saanich Peninsula of late than ever before, and many persons have been waging a losing battle against the pest. Their activities have been increased during the present hot, dry spell, as the insects have been forced to extend the range of their search for food and water. The pest has been found in hitherto unheard of places, and the appearance of the insects in dwellings at times has been causing considerable concern lest the infestation reach proportions beyond control.

The following formula is recommended by entomological authorities as a satisfactory bait:

Mix together bran, twelve pounds; molasses, one quart; beef scrap or meat meal, two and one-half pounds; sodium fluoride, twelve ounces, and water, six quarts.

DIRECTIONS FOR MIXING
Soak the beef scrap for three hours or more before using. Dissolve the sodium fluoride in the water, add the molasses and mix with the bran to make a crumbly mass.

Scatter thinly in warm evenings throughout the summer. Thirty pounds is about sufficient for an ordinary city lot.

Watering the garden should not be done for two or three days, or, if done, avoid wetting the bait. Chickens should be kept in. In this mixture it is the molasses that attracts the insects and they feed on the beef scrap. The sodium fluoride is the poison, while the bran is used to give bulk to the mixture.

Mother believed in appealing to her children rather than punishing them. One day, when Tommy had been particularly fractious, she said: "If you are going to be naughty, Tommy, you'll make mother poorly, and she'll die and be taken to the cemetery."

Tommy hugged her. "May I sit beside the coachman?" he asked.

MAGICIAN WINS THREE AWARDS

William Harkness Secures
Seventeen New Tricks
From "Upper Ten"

WILLIAM HARKNESS

W. Harkness, magician and illusionist, has returned from the Pacific Coast Magicians' Conference, held in Oakland, Cal., with a few more tricks up his sleeve with which to entertain local audiences.

During his residence in this city, Mr. Harkness has given some 300 performances for organizations in aid of charitable institutions.

Mr. Harkness won three prizes at the Oakland conference. His most valuable one is the first prize for sleight-of-hand, which places him as the foremost magician of this type of conjuring on the Pacific Coast. He also won a second prize for stage effects and a third prize for hypnotism.

Due to his performances given at the convention, he was able to procure seventeen new tricks from the "Upper Ten," which cannot be bought. They must be won by hard work and excellence of performance in other tricks.

Mr. Harkness can stage a one-hour performance with only two decks of cards. He can put on a two-hour show with all his stock, which is valued at $3,000, and still have a few tricks left over for reserve.

If there are none of these bad habits, or if these bad habits are corrected and still there is not the "average" gain in weight, then some infection may be undermining the system.

The family physician should be consulted and also the family dentist. Loss of weight or prevention of gain in weight may be due to such defects as adenoids, infected tonsils, infected teeth, other infections, or some digestive disorder.

There is always a reason (more often several) which can be discovered by persistent search and the corrected of which should leave the child free to gain in weight.

What particular foods are best for body and weight building? Milk, eggs, and when getting into and during the teens, plenty of meat, are excellent foods for building and repairing worn or used tissue.

Sugar, potatoes, bread, cream, butter, nuts, fresh and dried fruits, and particularly all the vegetables because of their vitamins, minerals, and their fibrous or cellulose tissue which prevent constipation, should be eaten.

In addition to food, the outdoor life must be encouraged as it stimulates appetite and promotes the general health. Cod liver oil is, as it always has been, of considerable help in increasing weight.

Effective Bait for Control of Earwigs
Insects Extending Range of Activities in Search of Food and Water During Warm Spell

Earwigs have been more numerous in Victoria and throughout the Saanich Peninsula of late than ever before, and many persons have been waging a losing battle against the pest. Their activities have been increased during the present hot, dry spell, as the insects have been forced to extend the range of their search for food and water. The pest has been found in hitherto unheard of places, and the appearance of the insects in dwellings at times has been causing considerable concern lest the infestation reach proportions beyond control.

The following formula is recommended by entomological authorities as a satisfactory bait:

Mix together bran, twelve pounds; molasses, one quart; beef scrap or meat meal, two and one-half pounds; sodium fluoride, twelve ounces, and water, six quarts.

DIRECTIONS FOR MIXING
Soak the beef scrap for three hours or more before using. Dissolve the sodium fluoride in the water, add the molasses and mix with the bran to make a crumbly mass.

Scatter thinly in warm evenings throughout the summer. Thirty pounds is about sufficient for an ordinary city lot.

Watering the garden should not be done for two or three days, or, if done, avoid wetting the bait. Chickens should be kept in. In this mixture it is the molasses that attracts the insects and they feed on the beef scrap. The sodium fluoride is the poison, while the bran is used to give bulk to the mixture.

Mother believed in appealing to her children rather than punishing them. One day, when Tommy had been particularly fractious, she said: "If you are going to be naughty, Tommy, you'll make mother poorly, and she'll die and be taken to the cemetery."

Tommy hugged her. "May I sit beside the coachman?" he asked.

An excellent chicken formed part of the fare at a luncheon party attended by two persons. After lunch they noticed a cock strutting on the lawn.

One of the persons said: "That bird seems very pleased with himself."

"No wonder," said the host, "considering one of his sons has just entered the ministry!"

Band Concert Will Be Last Of This Season

The final concert by the Canadian Scottish Band, in the present series, will be given in Beacon Hill Park, this afternoon, at 3 o'clock.

Lieutenant James M. Miller will conduct the band in a programme, which includes many request numbers. The opening march, "Semper Fidelis," is by request, and is one of Sousa's very best. A selection from the musical romance, "Some Time," by Friml, will be followed by "Valse Brune," by Krier.

Ballet music from "William Tell" (Rossini) is requested, and will be followed by the overture, "Masaniello" (Auber), which has also been requested. "Classica," a selection which is made up of the best-known classics by famous composers, will open the second part of today's programme.

Next is a cornet solo by Bandman Mosop, who will render Del Riego's "Oh, Dry Those Tears." A selection from Ziegfeld's screen operetta, "Rio Rita" (Tierney), and two request numbers, "Voyage in a Troopship" (Miller) and Rogers' "Military Tattoo," will bring the programme to a conclusion.

The newly-created Provincial Marketing Board made its first appointments for Tuesday morning next, when it will receive here delegations from the Fraser Valley Milk Producers' Association and from the Farmers' Co-operative Union.

Revising the days of the Dairy Products Sales Adjustment Act, discussions before the board may turn on the issues of pooling and levies in the fluid milk market.

MARKING TIME ON MARKETING

Provincial Board Will Meet Mainland Delegations on Tuesday Morning

Making a cautious approach to a Pandora's box of new complexities, the Provincial Government yesterday was seeking further definition of its duties and responsibilities under Federal and Provincial marketing laws.

Hon. K. C. MacDonald was negotiating with Hon. Robert Weir, who was momentarily away from the national capital, as to the exact division of Federal and Provincial authority.

The newly-created Provincial Marketing Board made its first appointments for Tuesday morning next, when it will receive here delegations from the Fraser Valley Milk Producers' Association and from the Farmers' Co-operative Union.

ONE-DAY SERVICE TO OUT-OF-TOWN PATIENTS</

Symbolism Of The Anglican Church

(By ROBERT A. GURNEY, and from the Notes and Comments by Rev. John Leish, Rector of All Saints' Anglican Church, Vancouver.)

THE symbolism of the Anglican Church has its foundation in Biblical history and forms one of the most interesting of church studies. Hundreds of worshippers who attend service probably do not know the proper meaning of the various appointments of the church. In this article a number of the important ones have been selected to show, mainly, that the church is itself the House of God and typifies the spirit of righteousness even though the ministering clergy be not present.

The Weathervane

THE rooster, and the rooster alone, is used on Anglican churches as a weathervane. On other buildings a weathervane may take the form of a fox, a horse, or other animal, but not so on a church. Why is this? The rooster is used as a warning symbol: "Let him that thinketh he standeth take heed lest he fall." It goes back to the proud boast of St. Peter: "Though all the world forsake thee, yet will not I." And the warning given to him by Jesus was: "Verily, verily, I say unto thee, the cock shall not crow till thou hast denied Me thrice." Later, we are told, Peter remembered the word of Jesus, which said unto him, "Before the cock crow thou shalt deny Me thrice." The vulnerability of St. Peter lay in his spiritual pride, and it is just here where so many followers of the Master are vulnerable. To remind us of this and to call upon us to be on our guard, this emblem is used on our churches.

Most of our churches and cathedrals are built in the form of a cross. When this is so we speak of them as being cruciform. Our Christian builders had their minds stored with the words of the Bible. They remembered that our Lord had spoken of His body as being the Temple. They thought of that Temple as it was on the cross and they built their temples in that shape. Their faith entered into all their work. So they trusted that the shape of their churches would remind those who came after them, of the great foundation truths of their religion. So much the better if it does this for us. The foundations are laid upon the cross, the spire is the uplifting of our thoughts of Christ, risen and exalted, while the weathervane teaches us self-trust and humility.

The Corner Turret

MANY of our churches have towers, one corner of which comes to a point or pinnacle. It is the highest point of the church. This carries our thoughts to the stone—"The stone which the builders rejected to become the head-stone of the corner." St. Peter, on one occasion, interpreted those words from Psalm cxviii as being the figure of the Lord. "This is the stone that was set at nought of your builders, which is become the head of the corner." Further in his first letter, St. Peter says: "Disallowed indeed of men, but chosen of God and precious." The meaning is this: the Jews, in building up their faith in God, left out faith in Jesus Christ. This we must not do. Jesus must be given the most honorable place in all our faith.

The Door and the Porch

THERE are many texts that would occur to the minds of the workmen when thinking of, and planning, the doors of a church. For instance they would remember: "I am the door: by Me if any man enter in, he shall be saved, and shall go in and out and find pasture." It is not a great step from this text to others: "And I, if I be lifted out of the earth, will draw all men unto Me; No man cometh unto the Father, but by Me." Since the builders conceived their salvation to come through Christ crucified, they did not hesitate to make free use, in the doors they constructed, of large square-headed pins, or nails. Dozens of such nails are to be seen in church doors, all reminding us of the nails that pierced the hands and feet of our Lord, nailing Him to the cross. The porch should remind us not to rush hastily into God's presence: "The Lord is in His Temple; let all the earth keep silence before Him."

Life's First Step

THE first step in the Christian life is baptism, so we are not surprised to see the baptismal font near the entrance of the church or cathedral, at the west end. Generally it is placed west of the south doorway on the south side of the nave. Font is derived from "fons," the fountain. The steps on which the font is placed after vary in number—from one to three. But the usual is one only. The three steps would indicate the Trinity in whose name the person is baptized. The one step, in use today, indicates quite definitely that here, at the first step, the first journey in the Christian life is commenced. Generally speaking, the font is of stone, possibly to bring to our remembrance the water that flowed from the stricken rock. "The Rock was Christ," and the baptized person is signed with the sign of the cross—symbol of the stricken Christ—"In token that hereafter he shall not be ashamed to confess the faith of Christ crucified."

Nave, Chancel, Sanctuary

THE Tabernacle and King Solomon's Temple consisted of, first of all, a court, termed the Outer Court; into this all and sundry might come to worship. To this part of the tabernacle or temple our church nave corresponds, for it is in the nave the bulk of the congregation worships. It is that part of our church or cathedral which lies westward of the chancel. Nave is from the Latin "Navis," a ship. The name is derived from the very early symbolism which likened the church to a ship, the Bishop in his elevated throne, the captain, the clergy the mariners, and the people the passengers. The ship specially intended was the Ark, though doubtless the boat which carried our Lord on. His apostles through the storm on the Lake of Galilee would be included in the symbolism.

Passing along the nave we come to the chancel, at the entrance of which we observe there are two steps. They may be, and there are exceptions, but comparatively few. It is here at the entrance to the chancel we receive the "Laying on of the hands." In other words are confirmed. It is the second great step in the Christian life, thus it is not surprising there should here be two steps. The first was at baptism, the second at confirmation, the latter really being the completion of baptism. The chancel is so named from the Latin "Cancelli," screens, there being a wooden screen built between the nave and the chancel. The chancel corresponds to the holy place in the Tabernacle and King Solomon's Temple. Into the holy place the priests entered daily for their duties connected with the daily services.

Church Sanctuary

AFTER passing through the chancel we come to the sanctuary, where the altar stands. This part of our church corresponds to the most holy place of the Tabernacle and King Solomon's Temple, into which the High Priest alone was permitted to enter once a year, on the Great Day of Atonement. In the sanctuary the clergy only minister, and it will be noted that the altar stands on three steps, thus denoting the third highest step in the Christian life, the life of conscious communion. There are many baptised who are not confirmed, many confirmed who are not communicants. Communion is made at the altar, the third and last step. Thus is seen that the very construction of our church shows that Christian life is one of continuous progress.

Build East and West

ANGELICAN churches and cathedrals are almost always built east and west, with the altar in the east. There is no written rule for this and sometimes the land forces the building of a church to be north and south, but wherever possible they are built as mentioned. So, also, when we say the creed we turn to the east, congregation and clergy. This is because the sun rises in the east and we find that Christ is alluded to as "The Day Spring"; also "The Sun of Righteousness" who will rise with healing in his wings. Also we have the familiar quotation, "His feet stand in that day upon the Mount of Olives, which is before Jerusalem on the East." Thus we look for His coming in the east and we turn in that direction when stating our belief. My notes refer to the fact that "we are buried with our faces to the east, and Mr. Leigh continues: "In burial there is an exception. It is, or used to be, that the clergy were always buried facing the west; so that they would be facing their congregations on the Resurrection morning. This was intended to remind them and their congregations of the great responsibility resting upon the clergy should any of the flock be absent at the Resurrection."

The Three Positions

IN the Anglican Church the whole of the Morning and Evening Prayer is not read from the one place, as in some of the other churches, but from at least three different positions. Prayers are prayed at the prayer desk—man addresses God. From the lectern portions of the Scripture are read as lessons—God addresses man. From the pulpit man addresses man. At the first the sinner addresses God, at the second God addresses sinner and at the third sinner addresses sinner.

Bells form another important part in Church ritual. In the Old Testament we read a great deal about the use of trumpets for the calling of worshippers together: "Make thee two trumpets of silver, of a whole piece shalt thou make them; that thou mayest use them for the calling of the assembly." Again, "The voice of the trumpet waxed louder and louder." We read of bells, it is true, in the Old Testament, for we know of the golden bells attached to Aaron's robe as he ministered before God in the Temple, but these bells enabled the worshippers to follow the movements of Aaron as he ministered unseparated by the assembly and they knew "That he died not" in that Holy Presence. Today bells give the call to worship and they enter into the life of all within their sound, both in joy and sorrow. Bells are rung at the wedding, but there is also the good old custom of ringing the "passing bell," rung when a soul is entering the dark valley of the shadow of death when the faithful are expected to pray for the passing soul. A joyful peal proclaims marriage; a muffled peal some great calamity.

The Church Pillars

ST. Paul writing to the Galatians said: "James, Cephas and John seemed to be pillars." By this is taken he meant that they were supports of the church at Jerusalem. It was a title given to men then living suggesting to us that we may also be pillars of the church in our generation. A pillar is strong in its support only if it is founded upon a rock. If the foundation is insecure then it is a source of weakness rather than strength. In very many Anglican churches and cathedrals is used what is called a "clustered pillar." There are several shafts, though all are joined together as one. There, of course, we have the true source of strength—many gathered together in one, one the One Foundation, which is Jesus Christ. Further, the pillar is straight and unbending. If it were not so, it would not bear the weight it is supposed to. Followers of Christ should be strong and unbending when it is a matter of Christian principles. "His that overcometh will I make a pillar in the temple of my Lord."

The windows of a church or cathedral differ from other windows in various details. One is they come to a point at the top. Everything in the church points upward—the spire, the roof and the arches, denoting the tendency of our Christian religion. There is another difference in that they are painted, shutting out the material world and suggesting to us spiritual thoughts. There are many lessons to be drawn from the beautiful windows in Christ Church Cathedral here.

In Anglican churches there are usually three aisles, or avenues. These have all been employed to symbolise the mystery of the Trinity—three persons and one God. As John Keble says:

"Three solemn aisles approach the Shrine; Yet all are one."

The Dress of Priests

IN the Anglican Church, as is well known, the clergy do not officiate in their out-door garments any more than the priests in the Old Testament did. A clergyman wears first of all a black cassock, denoting the black sinfulness of human nature, but over the cassock he wears a surplice, made of white material, denoting the white robe of Christ's righteousness. The material is linen and is based on the words: "The Priest shall put on his linen garment," which means that they shall "be clothed in righteousness." In the Christian church this shows us the sinner washed clean and white. "They have washed their robes, and made them white in the Blood of the Lamb, therefore are they before the Throne of God, and serve him day and night in His Temple."

The clergyman's stole also forms an interesting study. A clergyman wears a stole during his ministrations. These are of various colors—white, used at baptisms, marriages, confirmations, burial of children seven years and under and at ordinations, also at the great Festivals, such as Christmas and Easter. Black, or violet, is worn for days of humiliation, penitential seasons such as Lent and Advent. Red is used on the days of martyred saints. The stole is also an emblem of service, for did not Jesus say: "Take My yoke upon you, and learn of Me; for I am meek and lowly in heart; and ye shall find rest unto your souls. For My yoke is easy, and My burden light." The hood worn by a clergyman is that of his college or university and simply denotes his academic standing.

The symbolism of an Anglican Church is one of the most interesting and beautiful studies of Christian life, and there are scores of smaller things within the church itself that have some relation to Scripture. The church speaks in a language that is universal and the messages carry the most beautiful thoughts and in this respect the Anglican Church stands alone. In some the ritual is more pronounced than in others, but that is a topic in itself upon which there is some division of thought.

TIGHT AND LOOSE

By NEIL GOW

THE collar round his neck felt tight, and he hated tight collars. He had a momentary impulse to tear the thing off, but shrugged his shoulders and smiled whimsically at a sudden memory of the first "stick-up" collar, a highly starched affair with pointed wings that constricted his young Adam's apple.

He had worn it at his very first dance, with a hired dinner jacket suit that smelled of camphor, on his seventeenth birthday. (Heaven! That was twenty years ago!)

He felt himself back in that hall ("Gents eighteen-pence, ladies a shilling, couples two-bob!"), solitary in a corner, bashfully aware that pretty girls in disturbing frocks were casting amused glances over their partners' shoulders at an embarrassed, red-faced youth.

What a lot had happened since then! Now he was aware that the floor under his feet felt unstable, and again his mind leapt into the past, to a rickety staircase in an office building off Cheapside.

That morning his mother had said, "Now, mind you spruce up for your first job, Clarry, dear," and he had brushed his boots, and made his face shiny with primrose soap—he would always remember climbing to the top-floor landing and standing hesitant, with beating heart, outside a door marked "Enter—Don't knock!"

Too shy to obey, he had rapped on the panel, then stood listening to the distant roar of traffic that seemed to shake this old house to its foundations. He nearly failed to hear that irritable "Come in, can't you?"

The gentleman in the office, who had a pen behind his ear, a tiny moustache and no welcome in his eye, seemed awfully old—at least twenty.

"Well?" he snapped.

"Please, I've come to work here."

"Who says so?"

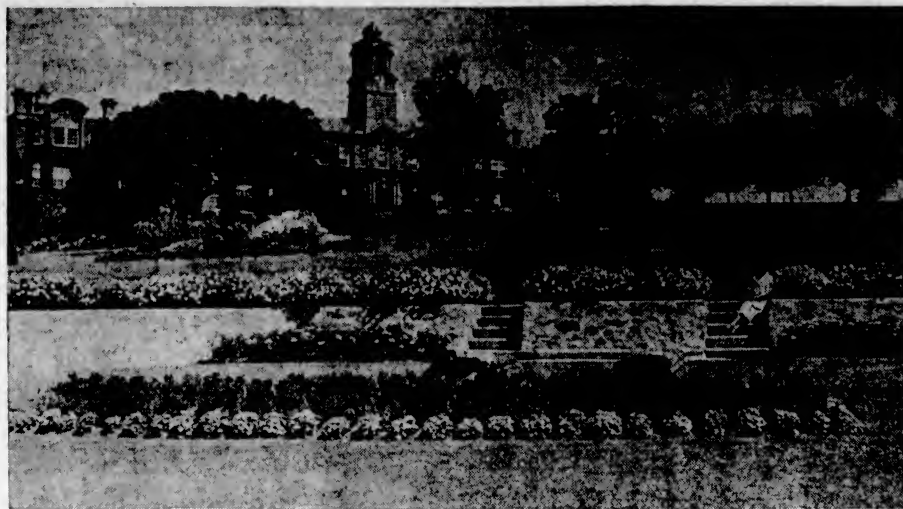

"Mr. Long, sir. He saw me in the employment bureau, sir, and told me to report at nine this morning. I'm the new junior clerk."

The gentleman pored his nails disdainfully.

"Oh, so you're the new office boy!" It had stung.

"I'm not an office boy. I'm a junior clerk."

phone (one said, "Hullo!" but "Long & Co. speaking"), how to deliver a parcel in Panyer Alley without getting lost in the city maze, how to put "Mr." or "Esq." on an envelope, but not both, and the difference in stamps for a letter to Manchester and one to the French shipping agents in Goulon—oh, heaps of things!

Every day for six months one worked in that room with a view of St. Paul's dome, and noticed how the floor quivered.

He recalled a morning of unreasoning panic when he had run from room to room crying "Clear out! The whole blooming place is falling!"—they had laughed at first, then looked soared, swarmed into the street and a few minutes later the house had come crashing down—police were holding back the crowd—a gentleman who looked worried and said he was the district surveyor was muttering, "Thank Heaven, nobody injured—!"

(It seemed like yesterday!) Later, in the new offices, Mr. Long had said nice things about the alert-minded lads; there had been promotion, a substantial increase in the pay envelope.

(Strange, how a shaky floor and a tight collar could affect a man's destiny!)

His mind darted back to that dance hall. It seemed that one was expected to bring one's own partner. Foolishly he had anticipated a free-and-easy atmosphere in which one could go up to any young lady and say, "May I have the pleasure?" But one just couldn't butt in on these united couples!

A dark girl with damp and mocking eyes giggled to another: "Look at that boy with a thirteen collar round his fourteen-and-a-half neck! The poor lamb's choking!" (But it was chiefly rage that made his cheeks burn!)

With heightened color he had gone up to the girl and said truculently, "You'll dance this with me, miss!" and, surprisingly, he had found himself waiting quite well with her. They were married two years later.

He was recalling their honeymoon, now. Lillian didn't want to bathe. "I'll sit and look at the pierrots," she said, "while you have your swim, Clarence."

Then he had gathered up towels and costume, walked across to the municipal bathing huts, swung open a striped curtain, stepped inside, and the loose flooring had given way. His foot had gone right through to the sand. A nasty wrench; and, business being business, one had played up that damaged ankle for all it was worth—after two stiff letters from that smart lawyer, the council had offered a handsome apology and a nice little cheque!

Mr. Long seemed sorry to lose a valued employee, but he said if Clarence thought that that hundred pounds—together with his post office savings—was sufficient capital to launch himself in business, well then, it only remained to wish the new venture "Good luck and God-speed."

The little business had grown and become a chain of businesses. Lillian had been ambitious, had spurred him on.

It was the silk muffer that brought things to a head. He recalled that evening. Lillian had tied his white bow (he could never make the thing sit right), and pinned a gardenia in his lapel, and told him to have a good time at the banquet.

"What will you do, old girl—moves?"

"No, the servants are out, and I don't like leaving the house. I'll just listen in, or ring up Herbert to come round and give me a lesson at contract bridge. One's a social outcast unless one plays well. You ought to learn, Clarry. Now that we are beginning to move in better-class circles—"

He grunted.

"Lot of chance I get, Lillian! I have to work—to go to these confounded dinners and clubs and lodges night after night—"

"You don't have to, dear!"

"Yes, I have to mix with important people, make business contacts, so that I can earn more money—more money that you spend—"

"Don't be a cross old bear. Here, let me knot your muffer—there!"

"Too tight!" he said.

"It isn't too tight, Clarry. It'll go all floppy if—"

"Confound it, it is too tight!"

With a petulant movement she had given the knot a jerk, laughed at his sudden scowl, laughed as he seized his crush hat and flung out of the house.

Over the soup and fish he felt remorseful. The long list of after-dinner speakers, printed on the menu, filled him with gloom. He'd been an irritable brute to Lillian! He decided that, as soon as the King's health had been drunk, he would slip back home and apologize—promise her that little string of pearls she wanted.

He had found Lillian and Herbert together, and they were not practising bridge. He had killed them both.

Somebody—it must have been the hangman—was saying: "Let 'er go!" Then the loose flooring under his feet gave way, the tight collar round his neck jerked horribly, and grew tighter.

Shrines of Britain's Glory

By CHARLES CONWAY
Berkshire—Part I

REMAINS of both early British and Roman occupation have been discovered in many parts of the County of Berkshire, but very little is known of its history prior to the days of the Saxons, when it formed a portion of the kingdom of Wessex. At the time the country was divided into shires by Alfred the Great the county was given the name of "Berrocshire," which, as Asser, the Saxon chronicler, tells us, was derived from "the wood of Berroc, where the box-tree grows most plentifully."

In the reign of Ethelred, the brother and the immediate successor of Alfred the Great, Berkshire was invaded by the Danes, who remained in possession until they were routed out by Alfred, and a century later, when Sæwen subjugated the whole of Britain, the county was laid waste by fire and sword.

The men of Berkshire were among the staunchest supporters of Harold at the Battle of Hastings, and their loyalty to the last of the Saxon kings was severely punished by William the Conqueror, who confiscated practically every estate in the county, so that at the time of the survey for the Domesday Book no Berkshire property of any importance remained in the possession of the Saxons.

The county was a storm centre during the civil wars in the reigns of Stephen, John and Henry III, and during the progress of the struggle between Charles I and Parliament, when Berkshire was for a time a stronghold of the Royalists, many battles were fought within its borders, and several of its towns suffered lengthy sieges.

Historic Reminiscences

ALTHOUGH the majority of the great national events, in which Berkshire played its part, were centred in the county town of Reading, or in the royal borough of Windsor, both of whose stories formed the subjects of earlier narratives in this series, the smaller towns and villages of the county possess an abundance of historical and literary reminiscences.

The picturesque old Cloth Hall at Newbury, which is now used as a museum, is a reminder that the town was once noted for its extensive cloth trade. In the reign of Henry VIII, John Winchcombe, who was known as "Jack of Newbury," amassed a great fortune from his cloth looms, and he not only entertained the King and his retinue when they were passing through the town, but he had one hundred and fifty of his own workmen trained as soldiers, and sent them at his own expense to fight at the Battle of Flodden in 1513. His house, which still stands, is but one of the many interesting old buildings in Newbury, and another is Shaw House, a fine Elizabethan mansion, in which are to be seen many relics of the Great Civil War of the mid-seventeenth century. Two fierce, but indecisive, battles were fought in the vicinity of the town, and at the first of them, which took place in 1643, Lord Falkland was slain, a fact which is commemorated by a monument erected upon the site of the engagement. The nearby Donnington Castle was once the property of Geoffrey Chaucer, the father of English poetry, who passed the last two years of his life there.

Famous Castle Built

WHILE marching to London, after the Battle of Hastings, William the Conqueror stopped at Wallingford, where he received the submission of Archbishop Stigand and a number of the Saxon nobles, and soon afterwards a strong castle was erected in the town by Robert D'Oyley, one of the Norman barons. In the reign of Stephen the castle was garrisoned by Queen Matilda, and was the scene of the signing of the peace treaty in 1153, while later a meeting took place there between John and the barons. The town held out for the Royalist cause until 1216, and after its fall the castle was demolished. Sir William Blackstone, the lawyer, whose "Commentaries on the Laws of England" is still a standard legal work, was buried in the Church of St. Peter in 1780.

Wantage was the birthplace of Alfred the Great, and also of Bishop Butler, the author of "The Analogy of Religion." Lord Wantage, who won the Victoria Cross by his gallantry in the Crimean War, and who represented the county in Parliament, took his title from the town, which he presented with a building, known as the Victoria Cross Gallery, in which are a collection of fifty paintings illustrating deeds which won the most-prized of British military decorations.

The town is situated in the Vale of the White Horse, which derives its name from the outlined figure of a horse, 374 feet in length, cut in the turf on the steep slope of the Downs. The figure is believed to have been cut originally in the days of the early Britons, although an old local tradition claims that it commemorates a battle in which Alfred gained a great victory over the Danes; while an adjacent knoll, according to another tradition, is the spot where the legendary St. George slew the mythical dragon. For many centuries a great festival was held to celebrate the periodical "Scouting of the Horse," on which occasion the entire population of the surrounding countryside would assemble to clear away the turf which had encroached upon the outline of the horse.—(Copyrighted).

Exile Returned From Dread Devil's Isle

PARIS—With a leap of a span of over a century, from the tropical wilds to the Boulevards of Paris, a stooping, bald-headed Frenchman finds himself almost a modern Rip Van Winkle. He is the once brilliant young naval officer, Ulmo, sentenced to life imprisonment in 1907 for betraying naval secrets to a foreign power. Part of his sentence—eight years—was served on the terrible Devil's Island. Now he is back with a free pardon. What are his impressions? Everything is new to him. The war meant nothing to him. Life has completely changed for him.

Overhead he hears the engines of airplanes flying 9,000 feet high. When he left France twenty-six years ago the world was ringing with the wonderful feat of an early experimenter who had flown 300 yards. The ceaseless roar of motor cars bewilders him. From his bedside, by means of wireless Ulmo listens with amazement to voices from a score or more stations from all corners of Europe. And how many entirely new topics seem to fill the newspapers! He finds that customs have changed. Thoughts have changed. Preoccupations unknown to him worry his fellow creatures. The returned exile confesses that he is in a new world, and he wonders if he will ever be able to attune himself to the strange, swift rhythm of this modern epoch.

Queen Iron Duke Fan

THE Queen will no doubt be interested in the news that George Arliss is to play the Duke of Wellington in his first British film. Her Majesty shares with Charlotte Brontë an interest in the Duke as one of the national heroes, and she is an ardent collector of any antiques connected with him. Within the last few years she has presented the Royal United Service Museum with no fewer than seven gifts of his kind.

Her Majesty searches the London auction rooms as well as antique shops for her collections, and not long ago she sent to the museum a relief portrait of the "Iron Duke" beautifully carved in ivory, which she had acquired at an auction. A part of her gift is a portrait of the Duke in raised and colored wax, an unusual and delicate piece of work.

Hospital for Traffic Accidents Is Being Erected in Paris

PARIS—For years the capitals and greater cities of Europe have been complaining of the enormous amount of extra work imposed on their hospitals by street accidents, and now Paris is taking the lead in erecting, in one of its busiest quarters, near the Etoile, a hospital whose sole purpose will be to give first aid to accident victims. The hospital will have some fifty beds and about $300,000 is to be spent on it.

A wide approach to the main door of the patients' section of the building will allow ambulances to move in at top speed, carrying the casualties to the waiting elevators. A separate block of buildings will house the doctors and nurses.

The site of the present Beaujon General Hospital is being used for this first aid centre, since the Beaujon is shortly to be moved to the northern outskirts of Paris. It was in this hospital that President Doumer died after being hit by Gogoloff's bullet two years ago. The accident hospital will be named after M. Paul Malmottan, who bequeathed most of the funds for it, though these have been supplemented by credits voted by the Municipal Council of Paris.

Golf Club in Convent

STRESA—Luvinate, which lies in the lovely valley between Lakes Maggiore and Como, will soon have the most original clubhouse in the world. What other links can boast a convent built in the thirteenth century as its headquarters? This convent belonged to the Sisters of the Benedictine Order, but the famous cardinal, San Carlo Borromeo, decided in 1566 that it should be closed and the nuns transferred to another house of the Order.

The convent and the church were used as dwelling-houses and barns by the peasants and have now been bought by some enthusiastic golfers in Milan. An eighteen-hole course is being laid out and the lovely buildings are being carefully restored. There are splendid cloisters with two tiers of semi-circular arches and the church has a square Lombard tower.

Nazis Dislike Bridge

A CURIOUS thing that is now attracting attention in Nazi Germany is the decline of contract bridge. The German Bridge League has broken up. The reason is that almost all the leading bridge players in Germany are Jews. It has also been looked on with disfavor as a foreign game. Germans call the suits by their French names and American technical terms, as "contre," "honor tricks" and "slam." Nazis do not like this.

Actor Is in Training for Hanging Role

MILAN—The part of Judas, which Domenico Otella has played for the past twenty years in the annual Passion Play at Sordovolo, requires some strenuous training, and the humble actor's enthusiasm for his art has nearly landed him in jail.

Although Otella, in the role of Judas, is able to remain at least five minutes hanging by his neck from a tree, he is continually experimenting in order to extend this period.

This year, while on a vacation at St. Vincent, his zeal resulted in embarrassing consequences. When two boys ran into the village shouting that a man was trying to hang himself, the whole population hurried to the woods where Otella was "practising." His explanation that he was preparing himself for a theatrical performance fell on incredulous ears, and it was not until relatives traveled to St. Vincent to back up his statement that he was released by police.

WITH FLOWERS

By OLIVE BARRETT

"ROBERT always brings me flowers," sighed Doris Cockrill, complacently. "He's so sweet, so devoted—still a lover, darling, after all these years."

She preened herself in front of the long mirror in her green and silver dressing-room. The room was typical of the woman, typical of her marriage. It was a little sort of room. Shallow. Some rooms have a humanity, a warm friendliness. They welcome you. You are at once at home in them.

But this room, with its frail, elegant silver-stained furniture, had no heart. It was not so much a place for living as a painted background. The figure in the foreground was always Doris.

She turned away from the mirror with a little satisfied sigh. Max had surpassed himself over her red-gold hair. In spite of her thirty-five years, there was not a line to be seen on her smooth and delicately tinted face. Her figure was still that of a young girl—and the green frock was a dream, well worth the money she had paid Yvonne for it.

"This is what Robert gave me for my birthday," she held out her arm to display a diamond bracelet.

"Lovely. You're certainly very lucky, Doris," Mary Carter spoke with a tinge of envy in her voice. That was what her hostess wanted. It was the sole reason why she had asked her to slip round to tea that afternoon, before her birthday party.

Doris and Mary had worked together before they married, and Doris had made a point of being persistently kind to her since. She always asked her to her parties.

For Doris adored parties. No occasion was too small to give what she termed "a little affair." In the same way, no occasion was too small for her vanity to demand Robert's offering of flowers.

"So you see, darling," she went on, as she showed Mary to the door, "I haven't bothered about the vases. I know, if he doesn't send, Robert will come in this evening armed with a great box of flowers for me. Some people might call it silly," she added, with a little childish grimace, "but Robert and I have just never left off honeymooning in all these twelve years. He's never looked at another woman."

It was half-past six when, glancing at the clock, Doris Cockrill realized suddenly that Robert was late. Robert had promised, particularly that morning that he would be home early. He had to change. The flowers had to be arranged. It was too inconsiderate. How selfish men were.

In five minutes she was fuming, in a state of mild hysteria. A quarter to seven, and he had still not arrived. Dinner was at half-past seven.

She was tottering, white fingers pressed to temple, when the telephone rang.

It was Robert's voice at the other end.

"Robert!" Her voice was shrill. "What has happened to you? Where have you been? It's too bad of you—too unkind, and on my birthday, too." She finished on a half-sob.

But there was something in his tone that, for the moment, silenced her.

"Doris—it's terrible—old Stewart—knocked down by a bus this afternoon. He—he—asked for me. I got the message at the office. Been with him ever since. He—he died ten minutes ago."

A feeling of faint relief came over her. She answered with mechanical sympathy.

"Dear, dear, how dreadful. Bob. Must have been awful for you, darling. I was beginning to think all sorts of dreadful things had happened to you. But you'll hurry now, won't you, dear? It's so late."

"But—Doris, please understand, but I simply can't. Old Stewart—he was my best friend—you know he was my best friend, don't you? I simply can't face this party tonight. I feel—I feel all to pieces over it, old girl. Look here, dear, you do understand, don't you? Make some excuse for me, and I'll come back later, when it's over."

The look on her face changed from frozen astonishment to utter fury. The man only heard her voice, shrill, hard with anger.

"Do you mean to say you're suggesting letting me down like this—and on my birthday, too? Do you want to make me look a fool in front of everybody?"

"But, Doris, for God's sake. Anyone would know I couldn't help it. You must understand."

"I understand, all right. You cared more for your precious friend than you do for me." She began to sob violently. "Why, you haven't even sent me any flowers!"

She continued to cry heartbrokenly. Crying still, after twelve years, worked as a rule, with kind-hearted, easy-going Robert Cockrill.

"R-R-Robert," she quavered pathetically, and heard a faint but unmistakable click the other end. He had rung off!

She couldn't believe her senses. She started to cry again in real earnest, for sheer self-pity. Presently she remembered that her guests were due at any moment. She dabbed at her tear-stained face, and hurried to her room to hide the last traces. She began to take heart as the skillfully-applied makeup showed her the face in the mirror which she had come to recognize as her own.

He would come round! They'd had plenty of little disputes, and he'd always made peace.

But at eight o'clock there was still no sign of Robert. It was with immense relief that she saw the approach of Parker, her immaculate parlormaid, with a box from the florist's.

An enormous box! She knew he'd come round. She clasped her hands like a delighted child while Parker cut the string for her.

Good heavens! The box was filled with orchids. Masses and masses of orchids. They must have cost him a small fortune. They were beyond all expectations.

"Isn't that too wonderful of him?" she cooed. "Too absurdly wonderful! Still a perfect lover after all these years. Will you excuse me while I read this little note?"

She read the first few words, then stood with an unnatural stiffness, staring. The color drained from her face, leaving two little pink spots of rouge on her cheeks.

"Dear Doris," she read. "You wanted flowers. Here they are. The most expensive that money can buy. I hope you will like them and that your guests will be suitably impressed. As for me, I'm sick of flowers, and I'm through. You've never cared a jot for me. Well, there's a woman who does. She happens to care for me and not what other people think. And she's as sick of flowers as I am. I've known her a good many years, for, you see, she works in the florist's shop."

Mysteries of Sahara Are Revealed in Murals

PARIS.—Remarkable mural paintings, copies of which have been brought from the Sahara, tell a story of a lost civilization dating from the fifth century B.C.

They were discovered by Professor Gauthier and M. Reygasse, who, with only a book and a native guide, conducted an expedition into the wilds of the Hoggar Mountains.

There, on the rock walls of a creek, they found a number of drawings cut into the stone, and paintings in yellow ochre sketched with astonishing mastery.

Human beings are represented without faces, or wearing masks, so that it is impossible to guess whether they hailed from Egypt, Crete or some other centre of civilization.

Two-wheeled war chariots are shown drawn by two or three horses abreast. It is these chariots which provide the clue for the date, since war chariots disappeared from the Mediterranean region in the fourth century B.C.

The paintings are proof that there existed an advanced civilization in the Sahara, with its own religion and army. Professor Gauthier suggests that these ancestors of the Touareg may have been the Garamantes mentioned by Herodotus.

No foreign wheat has been allowed to be imported into France for milling for domestic purposes since April 16, 1933.

Expanding Rail Traffic on Germany's Lines

STATISTICS issued by the German State Railways show there is now a total of 18,725 miles of motorways (connecting remote areas with main railway lines, etc.) compared with 33,437 miles of railway. Passenger motor traffic now covers 123 routes over 1,876 miles, and goods traffic 550 routes over 16,860 miles. In the last ten years passenger traffic has grown from 20,000 to 5,480,103 and the distance travelled from 12,500 miles to 4,337,500 miles. Goods traffic has increased from 65,000 tons to 890,000 tons.

The new Diesel-engine "railroad Zep" has covered the run from Berlin to Cologne in four hours nineteen minutes. The fastest steam train does the journey of 380 miles in seven hours.

Tourists this summer can make a three-day uninterrupted bus journey from the Konigssee on the eastern frontier of Bavaria to the foot of the Feldberg peak in the Black Forest on Germany's western border. Calls are made at Bad Reichenhall, Garmisch, Oberammergau, Lake Constance and Freiburg, among other lovely and interesting spots.

World's Oldest Man

ISTANBUL—Ahmet Bey, who lives at Bursa, near here, claims to have succeeded his "friend and chief," Zaro Agha, as the "oldest man in the world."

At 133, which he declares is his age, he enjoys excellent health. He has been married three times, and five of his sons have been killed fighting for Turkey.

He visited Zaro Agha shortly before his death. While he had a great respect for the "oldest man," he believes that he exaggerated a bit about his age.

"I would put Zaro's age at about 150," he said. "I don't think he was 160."

Ahmet Bey's memory is excellent, and he remembers very well the Battle of Sebastopol in 1854, in which he took part.

Diversions in Bathing

Miss Elsa Maxwell and Lady Bridget Poulett have arrived at their respective villas in Cannes and Lady Adrian Baillie, Miss Kay Norton and Miss Paget have made their rendezvous in Monte Carlo.

Palm Beach Casino, enlarged and improved as result of the success of roulette, has not only an open-air restaurant but also a gaming room with a sliding roof, and at the Summer Casino at Monte Carlo roulette can now be played under the stars. Famous people came along from all parts of the coast to the opening of the first "snack-bar" in Cannes.

Plan Wallace Memorial

EDGAR Wallace, novelist, playwright and journalist, is to have a memorial in Fleet Street. A plaque will be set in the wall of the premises of Thomas Cook, the tourist agent, near Ludgate Circus, where Wallace, starting life as a newsboy, sold papers on his first pitch. There were few branches of journalism unknown to Wallace, who was in his time reporter, special writer, sub-editor, news editor, sporting writer, sporting tipster, gossip writer, political writer, foreign correspondent and film critic.

Wallace's old chief, Lord Northcliffe, is the only other journalist honored with a memorial in Fleet Street, though there are many tablets to journalists in St. Bride's, the parish church of London journalists.

Cowslip in the Castle

THEY were all going down the worn stone steps of the castle to tea, coming very carefully, first old Mrs. Nettleton and Mrs. Evans, and then Miss Nettleton and Miss Evans, and behind them Cowslip was skipping down, wishing the grown-ups would go faster.

It was a very old castle indeed, built just after the Battle of Marston Moor, and Cowslip, who loved history and was hoping one day to take a scholarship for Cambridge, could not help patting the vast ancient walls as she came down.

She had never, never been in such a place. Her mother and aunt had brought her, and had told her that it was very sad because the family of Nettleton, who had lived in the castle for centuries, were obliged to sell it because they had become so poor.

They had been in Miss Nettleton's bedroom, with its marvelous illuminated ceiling, and they had been in the little chapel with its stone altar, where it was said two ghosts met to whisper. But they had not had time to climb to the top of the turret.

Cowslip's head was full of romance; her mother had seen her getting pale, as she did when she was excited.

Down they came to tea in the great Barons Hall, where the carpet was so vast and so shabby, and the ancestors' portraits hung round, all soon to be removed and sold, while Mrs. Nettleton and her daughter moved to a new little red brick house.

"Come along, Cowslip," said Mrs. Evans, looking round for her daughter. Old Mrs. Nettleton had gone to sit in her high carved chair. She was already busy with a fine old Queen Anne teapot, and Miss Nettleton was passing the scones, and nobody missed Cowslip but her mother.

"I'll just look outside, if you don't mind," said Mrs. Evans, and went out.

But Cowslip was not to be seen, and the deer's antlers and old armor looked on to a silent hall. "Cowslip, Cowslip!"

Mrs. Evans did not wish to make a fuss. She said quietly, "Perhaps she has gone up to the library again. She is very fond of poetry; she may be reading something interesting and have forgotten the time."

But when they went upstairs after a few minutes there was no sign at all of Cowslip. It was rather alarming and mysterious.

The old castle was very eerie, at least so Mrs. Evans thought; and Miss Nettleton, who did not seem at all concerned because she did not understand young people, said, "It is queer. I told your daughter about the legend that has to do with this old place. There is supposed to be a water elf in that pond just outside; it drags children down to the bottom. It comes up out of the water just to that window in the lower hall, which looks out on the pond."

"Of course that is nonsense," said Mrs. Evans, though her heart beat fast. "It is quite an absurd story!"

"Won't you have some tea, dear Mrs. Evans? Your daughter is bound to run in a minute." "What is it all about?" cried old Mrs. Nettleton, who was very deaf.

"I was hearing about the water sprite," said Mrs. Evans.

"Ah, it's quite true about that," said the old lady, nodding. "But where's your nice little golden-haired Cowslip gone?"

"We—we do not know," stammered poor Mrs. Evans. "We really must have a proper search," she added.

And so, with the servants, they hunted all the castle; and presently they went up the turret stairs. And there came a friendly squeak from a hole in the wall—where sat Cowslip.

Mrs. Evans almost wept with relief. "My darling! We were so anxious. What on earth—?"

"Oh, Mother, I'm so sorry, I didn't know you'd miss me till after tea," said Cowslip.

"I just turned round and went upstairs to explore, because I knew I would never have the chance again and I should so like to write some verses about Castle Nettleton, and give them to the ladies that have to leave it."

Hikers' Leader and Mascot

N. B. Sanson, of Banff, seventy-two-year-old president of the Trail Hikers of the Canadian Rockies, at the end of the four-day trek through the Yoho Valley, congratulates the organization's new mascot, ten-year-old John Wheeler, son of Col. E. O. Wheeler, of India, and grandson of A. O. Wheeler, of Banff, founder and president of the Alpine Club of Canada. The boy is being educated in Canada and will henceforth accompany the hikers on their treks. President Sanson is seated on the rock bearing the bronze tablet commemorating the work of the late Tom Wilson, famous Banff explorer and guide, who was the first white man to behold the beauties of Lake Louise.

Madame Curie's Story

THE story of the discoverer of radium should be an inspiration to girls the world over. It has been told on this page before while that wonderful woman was living. Now she has gone, a writer in The Children's Newspaper tells it again, and every one should read it:

The death of Madame Curie has taken from the world a charming woman and one of our greatest scientists.

Born in Warsaw, daughter of a Polish professor, her mother, headmistress of a high school for girls, died when she was nine, and little Marie Sklodowska had to go to a Russian school where Polish pupils were treated as enemies and life was unbearable. At fifteen she became governess to some children in the country, and there she dared to organize a secret school for the village children, thus risking imprisonment or exile to Siberia.

Her Favorite Studies

HER favorite studies were mathematics and physics, and she dreamed of a laboratory of her own.

In four years she was back in Warsaw, where, with the help of her father, who called her Miss Professor, she obtained access to a small physical laboratory, where she could work every Sunday, her only free day. At last she was able to get to Paris with the money she had saved from her small salary. She took a poor garret on a sixth floor and went on giving lessons, working in her spare time for examinations. After two years of poverty and incessant work she graduated in physics, and then in mathematics.

She was now admitted to the laboratories at the Sorbonne, and there met Pierre Curie. They were married in 1895.

Pierre Curie was Professor in the Paris School of Physics and Chemistry, but his salary was so small that all the housework and cooking had to be done by Madame Curie herself; but she managed to do it, to help her husband in the laboratory, and to prepare herself for a professor's certificate, which she gained a year after her marriage. The following year their child, Irene, was born. Happily Pierre Curie's father came to share the home, and he helped to take charge of the baby.

How the Discovery Was Made

ABOUT that time Henri Becquerel's discovery of the radio-activity of salts of uranium made the Curies resolve to study it.

Madame Curie found a new substance much more active than uranium, and gave it the name of polonium, after her native country; and then, while she and her husband were studying polonium, they discovered that it was a compound. They separated it and found that they had in their hands tiny fragments of the most powerful form of matter in the world. They called it radium.

It was not enough to define the existence of such a substance; it had to be separated as a pure element. To undertake such a difficult task without money or equipment seemed impossible, but the Austrian Government came forward with a gift of radio-active residues, and in an old shed in the grounds of the School of Physics they set to work to treat these quantities of ore.

Four Years of Heroic Toil

THE glass roof leaked, in Summer the heat was terrible, and in Winter the cold was intense. It was hard work, requiring great physical strength as well as precision. Madame Curie would sometimes spend a whole day mixing a boiling mass with a heavy iron rod nearly as tall as herself. It took four years to produce evidence that radium was a true element, though with a proper laboratory they could have done it in a year.

Their financial position was greatly improved by the Nobel Prize which in 1904 they shared with Professor Becquerel. Pierre Curie took a new chair of Physics at the Sorbonne, a second child was born to them, and in 1906 Madame Curie was herself appointed to a special chair at the Sorbonne, the first woman to be so honored. But this was a tragic year, for her husband was killed, run over by a lorry in the streets of Paris. Madame Curie stifled her grief and went on. In 1911 she won the Nobel Prize for Chemistry again.

With the outbreak of war she organized the first use of radium for military hospitals, establishing centres and fitting up a car which put radium at the command of any hospital round Paris. She drove the car herself for a long time.

Madame Curie and her husband were true idealists. Not once did either try to draw from their great discovery any material profits. They published the process of the preparation of radium to the world. They took out no patent and reserved no advantage in any industrial concern, but offered their hard-won secret for the benefit of sufferers all over the world.

Elizabeth Barrett Browning

The white-rose garland at her feet,
The crown of laurel at her head,
Her noble life on Earth complete,
Lay her in the last low bed.
For the slumber calm and deep:
"He giveth His beloved sleep."

Soldiers find their fittest grave
In the field whereon they died;
So her spirit, pure and brave,
Leaves the clay it glorified.
To the land for which she fought
With such grand impassioned thought.

Keats and Shelley sleep at Rome,
She in well-loved Tuscan earth;
Finding all their death's long home
Far from their old home of birth.
Italy, you hold in trust,
Very sacred English dust.

Shadow Portraits

IT is to Etienne de Silhouette, an unpopular French Minister of Finance of the eighteenth century, that we owe our word silhouette.

He owed his unpopularity to the fact that he was economical of expenditure and introduced strict reforms to replenish the French coffers during the British and Prussian wars. His methods were wise and admirable, but his acts soon degenerated and became foolish and short-sighted, and he fell from power after a rule of four months.

There are two stories as to the exact relationship the word silhouette bears to this French Minister. When he fell from power his name became a byword for miserliness and niggardliness, until any mode of fashion that was plain or cheap was said to be "à la Silhouette." At last the word came to be applied to a popular method of reproducing portraits by outlining the shadow projected by candlelight on a sheet of white paper and filling in the outline.

Another explanation of the origin of the word tells us that M. de Silhouette, after his fall from office, spent many hours in making shadow portraits.

This process of portraiture was very old, but only at the time of this story, about 180 years ago, did these shadow photographs become known as silhouettes.

England's Garden

THE chronicler, William of Malmesbury, described Worcester as "a land rich in corn, productive of fruits, in some parts by the sole favor of Nature, in others by the art of cultivation, enticing even the lazy to industry by the prospect of a hundredfold return." This was more than seven hundred years ago. Writing four hundred years later Daniel Defoe stated: "From Tewkesbury north it is twelve miles to Worcester along the banks of the Severn, where I was wonderfully delighted with the hedgerows, lined all the way with apple and pear trees full of fruit, and those so common that any passengers as they travel the road may gather and eat what they please."

The name "Worcester" is derived from its old name Wicwarcaster, which means the castle of the inhabitants of Wicci.

Worcestershire is rich with historical events. At Evesham Simon de Montfort perished. At Tewkesbury Margaret of Anjou lost her young son, Prince Edward, and with him all her hopes and ambitions.

Life of a Spider

HOW little we know about spiders! How seldom we see them! Many live down among the grass-roots, under drifted leaves, and amid fallen pine-needles—a tiny race, yet living a life, vivid, intense and heroic, fighting and slaying, mating and bringing forth young.

Few things in natural history are more remarkable than the multitude of these small many-legged animals, often of beautiful structure, with complicated and fascinating life histories, yet so seldom seen and so little understood. Age-long experience has taught spiders the perils of self-advertisement. Save for one or two of house or garden, a scorpion or two, and here and there a mite, we see them not and heed them not.

One reason is that they are night hunters, and they hunt alone. They are flesh-eaters, and eat only living food: flies, wasps, bees, ants, beetles, earwigs, butterflies, moths, harvestmen, woodlice, and other spiders; even sometimes taking caterpillars and pupae, worms and small fish.

They have deadly enemies: their own relations, birds, and ichneumon flies. The little hedge-sparrow is a mighty eater of spiders. Toads eat them, lizards, various insect-eating animals, and even monkeys. Wasps sometimes catch small spiders, sting them to death, carry them to their nest, cut them into pieces, and feed them to their young.

The solitary wasp is a great enemy. It digs a hole and stores it with spiders, deposits an egg, and seals the hole. By its sting it paralyzes the spiders, which may live for six or seven weeks, though unable to move, finally becoming food for the wasp's grubs. As many as six hundred of these wasps' cells have been found in one haystack, stocked with some ten spiders each.

Most spiders hatched in Spring or Autumn mature during the Autumn or Spring following, and die in the Winter. They are creatures of one season as a rule (wolf spiders and other house spiders may live longer) and the female's life task is done when she has spun her egg-cocoon.

Grateful Thrush

A thrush lives in our garden.
And sings his songs to me;
I give him crumbs in Winter,
He's as tame as tame can be.

One morning, when I wakened,
I heard a funny sound,
Bang, bang, outside my window;
Surprised, I looked all round.

To see what could have caused it.
And saw it was that bird
Who'd all the time been making
The noises that I'd heard.

He wanted snails for breakfast.
He'd take one, then he'd fly
Right up above a big stone
And drop it from on high.

And if it wasn't broken
He'd fly up once again,
And down once more he'd dash it
With all his might and main.

And when he'd had his breakfast
He sang a song to me.
Saying, "For crumbs in Winter
I'm grateful as can be."

"And now that it is Springtime
I'm helping you instead
By catching snails; I'll not leave one
In any garden bed."

NOW that school is about to open, there will be a small number of left-handed little ones in the baby classes. An English specialist, Dr. Macalister, of Liverpool, says that it is a mistake to force a naturally left-handed boy or girl to use the right hand when they would naturally use the left, for such an inhibition may lead to a nervous disease like stammering.

The reason for this is probably that the half of the brain which controls the side of the body most frequently used is more developed than the opposite half of the brain. Owing to the fact that the nerves from brain to body cross, it is the right half of the brain which is most developed in left-handed people. The left lung of a right-handed person and the right lung of a left-handed person are the most seriously affected in inflammation of that organ, and chilblains are more troublesome on the hand which is used less.

The moral of the whole question seems to be that ambidexterity should be encouraged in children.

A Brave Deed

ROBIN lived with his grandmother in a neat little cottage near a big farm. It was on New Year's Day when Robin first tried the new bicycle that had been given to him as a Christmas present, and he was going to meet his grandmother who was at the farm. As he was passing a field he noticed a big bull chasing a milkmaid, who was crying out for help in a terrified voice.

On seeing the girl's danger, Robin jumped off his bicycle, pulled a red handkerchief out of his pocket, and waved it as he ran into the field.

Immediately the bull, attracted by the red handkerchief, left the milkmaid and ran after Robin, who quickly mounted his bicycle again and peddled away as fast as he could.

When the boy reached the cottage he went in and shut the door. At once the bull stopped and walked slowly away.

Later Robin was rewarded with a gold watch with a nice inscription on the back of it for so bravely helping the milkmaid.—Written by John McEwen.

A Merry Game

ARRANGE three sticks, about the size of a walking-stick, in the ground. These sticks must form a large triangle, there being a distance of nine feet between the sticks. Fix the sticks firmly in the ground. Mark the starting point two feet from the first.

A hat is placed on the first stick; the second stick is left empty; and a hat is placed on the third stick. Each player must look carefully at the sticks. When blindfolded he must walk to the first stick, take the hat from it, walk to the second stick, and place the hat on it. Then he must walk to the third, remove the hat, and carry on again to the first stick on which he must put the hat he obtained from the third stick.

You will find plenty of fun in this game, because most players will wander away from the sticks

A Child's Room

"This little room is all my own,"

Said Mary Alice Blair.

As, smiling, she took my hand

And led me up the stair.

"Beside this window, wide and low,

I keep my rocker set.

And on the window sill there blooms

A pot of mignonette.

"This bookcase my dear daddy made

To hold the books I need;

And here on rainy afternoons

I often sit and read.

I love this picture on the wall,—

The one you sent to me,—

Where Christ is blessing little ones

Who crowd about His knee.

"This little bed, so soft and warm,

With snowy spread and sheet,

And downy pillow for my head—

I try to keep it neat.

"This patchwork quilt my grandma made,

With stars laid row on row;

I'll make one like it, too, some day

When I have learned to sew.

"My mother made this pretty rug

And laid it by my bed

Where I may kneel and softly pray

When good-nights have been said.

"This little room is all my own,"

Said Mary Alice Blair.

And, well content, she closed the door,

And smiling, went downstairs.

The Fisherman's Hut

The fisherman's hut is the place for Jim;
It's the sort of a place that fascinates him;
There are spars and blocks and folded sails,
And fishermen, too, to tell him tales;
There are ropes and nets and lobster pots,
And fishermen, too, to teach him knots;
There are jerseys blue with knobby darts,
And fishermen, too, a-swallowing yarts;
There are bits of boats from off the sands,
And fishermen, too, with horny hands;
There are lines and hooks and corks as well,
And fishermen, too, and a tarry smell.
The fisherman's hut is the place for Jim,
The fisherman always make room for him;
They tell of sharks and whales they've fought;
He tells of tiddlers he has caught!

Wise Old Crow

NOT every crow and rook is wise enough to move house before the tree falls, as a reader lately gave us proof; but yet another instance of that strange foreboding of disaster which comes to some of these birds has been seen in Omore Vale, Glamorgan.

For ninety years crows have built their nests in the branches of a lofty oak 200 years old. A short time ago they moved to another tree, and a week later their old home tottered in a slight breeze and fell with a crash.

The wise old crows looked on and cawed triumphantly.

Getting Ready for Work

WHEN you read this, the last week of your holidays will have begun. The long vacation is over at last. What a lot of fun the last two months have brought to most of you! Some of these days you must tell us all about it. In the meantime you will be very busy getting ready for school. A few of the big boys and girls will want to help by earning money, but not all who wish to do so will find positions. You have had a long, long play-time. Most of you will be glad to take your books and get to work.

Now, play must take second place. You cannot expect to do well in school unless you put your whole heart into your work. Baseball, football and other sports are all right in their place, but work comes first. "This is old-fashioned stuff," do you say? Yes, but some old fashions do not change. "Whatever thy hand findeth to do, do it with thy might" is a command that will make strong men and women now as it did centuries ago. The world has no room for slinkers, and there should be none in our schools.

All boys and girls cannot be clever or talented, but everyone who does his or her best will find a place among the world of workers. But for this week play as hard as ever you can and be ready for lessons when Labor Day is over.

World Day for Animals

IN connection with the yearly observance of World Day for Animals in all parts of the world, the local Anti-Vivisection Society has arranged for an essay competition for children on Vancouver Island only. The title is: "Why We Should Be Kind to Animals and Celebrate World Day for Them."

Rules: Put name, age and address on paper. Do not write more than 500 words. Send not later than September 27 to Miss Dora Killo, 315 Bayward Building, Victoria, B.C.

Prizes will be awarded in the following classes: Under fifteen years, under twelve years, under ten years.

The winners will be the guests of the society at the silver tea to be held on October 6 at New Thought Hall, Fort Street, 3:30 to 5:30, when the prizes will be distributed.

World Day for Animals is dedicated to the memory of the gentle St. Francis of Assisi, friend of animals.

Florence Nightingale

FLORENCE NIGHTINGALE, famous English nurse, was born in 1820. She took a great interest in hospital work while she was quite young, and was trained in Germany and France as well as in London. During the Crimean War, the sufferings of our soldiers were terrible, and Florence Nightingale organized a body of nurses and set sail with them to Scutari in 1854.

A woman of iron determination and enormous ability, she changed the whole arrangements for dealing with the sick and wounded. She was known among the soldiers as "The Lady of the Lamp," in allusion to the way in which she visited their sick-beds at night, carrying a lamp to see that all was well with them. Florence Nightingale died in 1910.

Puzzle Corner

A Garden Puzzle

In his garden a man has a certain number of fruit bushes. Five more than a third of them were gooseberries, eight of them were red currants. The rest, which were seven less than a half of the total number of bushes, were black currants.

How many were there of each kind?

A Charade

When night brings on her moonlight hour,
And stillness holds her magic power,
All mortals to my first repair,
And bid adieu to toil and care.
My next for various ends designed,
Yet oft my first you there will find.
Within my whole you seek repose
Forgetting life and all its woes.

A Riddle in Rhyme

My first is in laughter and also in grief,
My second's in shortness and also in brief,
My third is in oval and also in round,
My fourth is in winding and also in wound,
My fifth is in sinner and also in saint,
My sixth is in crimson and also in paint,
My seventh's in giddy and also in gay,
I'm what children are doing each moment and day.

What Is It?

Eight letters do compose my name,
And all the vowels grace the same.

Deserved Promotions

HIGH School pupils in Victoria are both sorry and glad these days. They must say good-bye to their principal, Mr. Ira Dilworth, who, since they began their High School studies, has taught, guided and controlled them. Those who have passed the matriculation examinations will look forward to the time when they will again be members of his English classes in the University of British Columbia. Mr. Dilworth has been offered and has accepted the position of Associate Professor of English in the Faculty of Arts in our own university. Those who know him and his work are sure that the students will benefit by his instruction, his influence and his leadership. While his old pupils thank Mr. Dilworth for his help in the past, they will wish him every success in the future.

Boys and girls will welcome as their new principal Mr. Harry L. Smith. For twenty years Mr. Smith has taught in the Victoria High School. During the greater part of that time he has led the sports of the boys. A thorough and painstaking teacher, his students have always given a good account of themselves. As their friend and leader he has won their affection and esteem. A loyal member of the big staff, he has the confidence of his fellow workers and has gained the approval of the Board of School Trustees who represent the citizens of Victoria. Old High School pupils as well as those now attending will wish Mr. Smith success and happiness in the position he is about to assume.

Garden Week by Week

By NORMAN W. F. RANT, F.R.H.S.

LAST week we discussed native plants found in the Olympic Mountains, just across from our own city. This article will deal with certain families indigenous to the woods and swamps of Northwest America and far up into Northern Canada.

Taking these families as a whole, all will grow and thrive in good, rich garden soil, planted in fairly heavy shade. Acid soil, while beneficial, is not absolutely necessary, but shade is essential.

When we speak of shade, one must not overlook the different types of shade. All trees more or less rob the soil within their reach and in the long run take complete possession. Oak trees, of which we have plenty, are not such soil robbers as our native pine, hemlock or cedar. Another detriment to pine or balsam is the harm caused by falling needles to certain plants by eventually souring the soil to a great extent.

Maples, especially our own native maples, throw out far too many roots, and these roots have a nasty habit of finding their way to the surface, no matter how high above the original surface the bed has been made.

Artificial shade is best, such as the north side of a house, the shady side of a fence, or under a latticed pergola.

The Ladyslippers

FIRST and foremost is undoubtedly the family of Cypripedium, or Ladyslipper. Once upon a time the yellow Ladyslipper grew in the vicinity of Victoria. Now, alas, one has to go far afield to find these plants in their native haunts. Cypripedium parviflorum, for all practical purposes the same as C. pubescens, is the common yellow Ladyslipper. Perhaps the nearest locality to us where this may now be found is in the woods around Linton or Golden, and it is fairly common in parts of Alberta. It is quite the easiest to grow in rich garden soil with peat and leaf mould added. Left alone, the yellow Ladyslipper will soon increase year by year. Associated with dwarf ferns, all the Ladyslippers are shown off to greater advantage.

Cypripedium montanum, the mountain Ladyslipper, is white with purple lines. It is reported to have been found growing where the present Oak Bay Golf Links are situated about twenty-five years ago. It may still be found near Penticton and is reported as near as Salmon Arm. Fairly easy to grow in this dainty Ladyslipper.

Cypripedium passerinum, carrying a solitary flower of white to pale magenta spotted darker, has been found recently in the far north of British Columbia, growing in wet meadows. Heretofore the nearest known locality is the eastern slopes of the Rockies. Both this variety and the yellow Ladyslipper are prevalent in Jasper Park.

Cypripedium arietinum, the Ram'shead Ladyslipper, is an Eastern plant. It blooms earliest of all. Its flowers of red and white, on eight to ten-inch stems, are shaped as grotesquely as to suggest a ram's head, hence the common name. It is found growing on hummocks or in thick mossy ledges.

Like Acid Soil

CYPRIPEDIUM acule, the pink mossassin flower, another Easterner, is found growing in thick leaf mould in the mountains. This plant requires acid soil and will not tolerate alkali. Fine needles do no harm to C. acule. In fact, a covering of these in the winter is beneficial. The flowers, growing singly on stems ten to fifteen inches from a pair of dark green basal leaves, are rose pink and quite as large as any of the other varieties. There is also a white form of Cypripedium acule.

The white Ladyslipper, Cypripedium candidum, has very little in common with the above. It is a native of the marshy bogs of Ohio and Michigan, growing in the open sun and is the only member of its family to insist on alkaline conditions. Quick to increase under cultivation, the white Ladyslipper is still one of the highest-priced on the market.

Cypripedium spectabile, also known under C. reginae and C. hirsutum, is the showy Ladyslipper, and very showy it is—another Eastern plant of the woods and the giant of the family. The flower stalks have been known to reach a height of thirty inches, and carry large pink to pink-purple flowers in twos or more. Perhaps one of the easiest, if not the most adaptable of the lot, is C. spectabile, which will grow readily in rich, moist garden soil in partial shade. It is the last to come into bloom.

Last, but, perhaps, not least is the California Ladyslipper C. californicum. It produces several white slippers, with yellow faces, on each stem and attains a height of two feet. This plant so far has not been successfully grown either here or in the East, although our island climate should be more conducive to success, perhaps erring on the wet side in winter. From all accounts a trial growing californicum is well worth the while.

A Bog Family

ANOTHER family of bog or wet shade plants with which the writer has become fairly familiar are the fringe orchids, or Habenarias. It took some time to understand these plants. If some of our readers could only have the privilege of seeing them growing in Nature's garden, as has been our privilege, many would wonder why they were not better known and grown.

There are perhaps half a dozen that appeal to us as being suitable, easily grown and ornamental. There are a dozen native to British Columbia and about the same number in Eastern Canada and the United States.

Habenaria lacerata, the ragged fringe orchid, is the best known in Eastern North America. It is found growing in moist, upland meadows. The spikes of flowers are greenish yellow and about a foot high. The raggedness of the flowers appeals to one more than the color.

Raising Carrot Seed on Vancouver Island

This Promising Plot of Carrots, Grown for Seed, Was Raised at the Dominion Experimental Station at Saanichton. Details of the Care and Cultivation of Carrots and Beets Grown for Seed Appear Elsewhere on This Page.

Habenaria ciliaris, or yellow fringe orchid, is another Easterner, perhaps more south of the line. Not easy to establish, this is a strikingly gorgeous orange-colored orchid with flower spikes of about a foot high.

Habenaria fimbriata, the large purple fringe orchid, is to us the best of the lot, carrying spikes of about eighteen inches to two feet of orchid-colored flowers which are, perhaps, the only fragrant flowers of this family. The green mountains are the place where this orchid is best known, growing in swamps at about 2,000 feet elevation.

Habenaria psychodes, the small purple fringe orchid, is very similar to the above. The difference in size of blossoms is not noticeable. It blooms later and has not the delightful fragrance of its higher, mountain relatives.

Habenaria blephariglotte, and which for the sake of facility we are very pleased to call the white fringe orchid, is found around the edges of ponds and lakes at a higher altitude, and even is sometimes found with its roots in water.

A B.C. Plant

HABENARIA dilatata, the white bog orchid, is a native of our own Province. Some day we hope to discover this orchid in its native haunts. In the East it is found with the white orchid above. It is not so large a plant.

Habenaria hookeri, the Hooker orchid, is of different habit to all of the preceding orchids, found growing under spruce and balsam trees in dense shade, with its woodland brothers and sisters, such as the Cliftonia, mossassin flower, painted trillium and bunch berries. It has two large glossy green basal leaves which lie flat on the ground, and the flower stalk, bearing greenish yellow blossoms, rises to a foot or so in high elevations exceeding 2,000 feet.

When one has searched acres of our Province for Habenaria orbiculata, one should know it well by name if not by description. Every bit of woodland or copse, etc., has always looked a likely spot for the large, round-leaved orchid, but never a one has it been my treat, to discover.

It remained for one of the highways of the Upper Country to at last produce this friend. Evidently it is a rare member of the family. The large basal leaves are not so dark green as H. hookeri and the blossoms are nearly white instead of green in color. It is found at lower elevations and is a beautiful member of the orchid family.

Special Field Museums Are Being Developed at Experimental Farms

SINCE the time the Dominion Experimental Farms System was established, nearly fifty years ago, numerous varieties of wheat, oats and barley have been collected from different countries with the hope that among the number might be found some which would contribute something to Canadian agriculture. Many of these introductions naturally were of little value, while others played an important part in connection with the breeding programme which has yielded such notable varieties as Marquis and Reward wheat, and Laurel and Legacy oats.

A sentimental attachment is frequently felt for old things, especially if they have served faithfully and well, be it an old plug hat or an old car, and the varieties of grain that were popular years ago are no exception. For this reason, among others, visitors at the various branch farms will now find growing in small plots, called special field museum nurseries, a large collection of old varieties as well as some of relatively recent development, all of which have a certain interest.

The historical value of some of the varieties found in these "field museums" is hard to evaluate, being of particular interest to the rising generation in helping to give them some idea of the epoch-marking advances that have been made in producing newer and better varieties for the various needs of Canada's basic industry.

Growing Carrots and Beets for Production of Seeds

By E. M. STRAIGHT

Supt., Dominion Experimental Station, Saanichton.

THE carrot is grown in nearly every home garden. This vegetable is included among the twenty most important vegetable crops grown for market, and rightly so, for its value as a food is more and more appreciated as the years go by. The two main classes are the pointed-rooted and the stump-rooted types. These are again divided into long, half-long and short.

Many varieties are listed by seedsmen, but only a few have outstanding value. One of the most popular sorts is the Chantenay. The Chantenay, when well grown, is excellent in size, shape and quality, from the standpoint of a table carrot. We know of nothing in the carrot tribe that can surpass it.

The seed should be planted in early Spring, just as early as the land may be worked on Vancouver Island. Hard, lumpy or stiff clay soils should be avoided. A good loam is the best, deeply and thoroughly worked and well fertilized with a complete fertilizer, with the emphasis placed on the potash. The rows should be about eighteen inches apart for hand work or three feet apart for horse cultivation. If some quantity of radish seed is sown along with the carrot it will be found that cultivation may be proceeded with much earlier than would be possible if the carrot seed had been sown alone. Radish germinates in a few days, while weeks may elapse before the first carrot seedlings are seen.

Storing for Winter

BEFORE the advent of hard frosts, the roots are carefully dug. Discard everything not true to type, all rough roots, all showing disease, etc. These may be fed to stock or otherwise disposed of. The selected roots are then topped, but care must be exercised in order that the centre bud is uninjured. An ordinary root cellar is the best place to store, but temperature, if possible, should be kept only slightly above freezing point. Carrots under these conditions should keep all winter in first-class condition.

In early Spring each root should be carefully gone over and roughed again. Besides the external examination, one should consider the size and character of the core. This may be determined by some sort of arrangement like an apple corer, only much less in diameter, which will remove a cross section of the carrot entirely. If the cross section does not please you, discard it; but if all right, it may be saved for planting, as the carrot is not injured for that purpose. The cross section may be replaced if one so desire. Select a clean, fertile, well-drained loam for seed field and fit thoroughly. Fertilize well—1,000 pounds of a complete fertilizer, broadcast, will not be too much on some fields, with the emphasis in this case placed on the phosphorus, as we wish to stimulate seed production. The roots are set in rows three feet apart, spaced about eight inches apart, and well packed in.

Isolate the field as far as possible and do not permit any wild carrots to grow near you, as they cross readily with the garden sorts. Harvest the crop when a large proportion of the seed clusters are mature and cure in the field until thoroughly dry, when threshing is done with hand flail or sick.

Growing Beet Seed

IN a general way, the plan of procedure for beets is the same as for carrots. The isolation of the field is even more important in this case, as the beet produces enormous quantities of pollen which may be carried by the wind to great distances, and the most careful work undone. When the crop is well cured, the stems become very brittle and many of them may be broken in short pieces when threshing. A broad canvas belt is used to remove these stems. The beet seeds are dropped upon the belt from a hopper, and if the belt is arranged at the correct angle the seed balls will roll to the bottom of the belt, while the stems will be flat and be carried over and dropped on the other side.

The Detroit Dark Red is a beet of quality standard with the gardener, and the best sort for the canner.

Strawberry Varieties Show Variation

STRAWBERRY varieties show remarkable variation in different districts and between different farms in the same district. This statement, says Professor D. A. Kimball, Ontario Agricultural College, Guelph, has so often been made that one hesitates to repeat it, however true it may be. An attempt to establish soil differences as the cause is very much like trying to settle which tooth of a circular saw cut one's finger. The real reasons for those differences are much more likely to be linked with cultural methods and marketing conditions.

One has only to consider the varying soils recommended by experienced growers to realize that there is no such thing as the best soil or even optimum soil conditions, in a narrow sense of strawberry growing. The crying need of our strawberry business is varieties with good dessert qualities that will still have good shipping possibilities and give high yields under reasonable methods of culture. We have the latter, and, to a certain extent, the second, but are woefully lacking in the first quality.

Swiss Chard in Seed

is seen holding up the stalks of a Swiss chard that has gone to seed, the plant having been left in the ground over winter. The stalks are eight feet seven and a half inches high. Mr. Sideleau has a fine garden at 429 Quebec Street.

Hybridizing Gladioli May Be Made a Thrilling Hobby

By DON I. MacMURCHIE

VICTORIA'S long temperate growing season, replete with sunny days and yet spared the scorching heat and devastating thunderstorms of many other parts of Canada, together with the light, rich soil so easily acquired here, make this an ideal locality for the cultivation of gladioli.

Flower lovers have taken advantage of these fine conditions to a great extent, and each summer the gladioli, in all its many colors and shades, from palest blues, yellows and pinks, from purest white through flame and orange, salmon and scarlet, to deep mauves, purples and reds, so dark as to be almost black, splashes hundreds of local gardens with a thousand delicate hues.

However, while the pleasure to be derived from the simple cultivation of these superb blooms is great, the gladioli fancier who is content with varieties developed by commercial growers misses one of the most intriguing phases of his hobby. Even though the grower be possessed of the finest corns in the country, there is a new thrill awaiting him when he begins to hybridize these in an effort to produce a new variety worthy of propagation, worthy of a place in the finest collections, worthy, perhaps of a nation-wide demand. There is a thrill to be found in this creating of something new, a thrill in this search for the beautiful, the perfect.

It is this yearning for improvement which has been the impelling force in the development of the finest in blooms, in fruits, in berries, in fact, in everything in which mankind delights today.

Hybridize Readily

GLADIOLIUS lend themselves so readily to hybridizing that for any grower to forego the pleasure of the creation of varieties entirely his own, even though he have little hope of developing a prizewinner, is needless. And that elusive reward, a new and finer bloom, may fall as easily to the merest novice as to the most practiced grower.

Of course, one may leave the hybridizing to the humming birds and bees and, gathering the seed so produced, plant it and so raise his seedlings, but to obtain the greatest satisfaction and, perhaps, the best results, the enthusiast must do the cross-breeding himself.

Most varieties of gladioli are good seed producers, and methods of hand fertilization are simple. Every flowerlet of the gladioli is bi-sexual. That is, every blossom on the spike possesses both stigma and stamens, and to produce seed the former must receive pollen from the latter. However, while each flowerlet is capable of fertilizing itself, since the stigma does not open for several hours after the anthers, the tips of the pollen-producing stamens, have matured, it is evident that Nature prefers that this should not happen.

How to Hybridize

THE grower, therefore, who undertakes to help Nature in the production of new blooms, finds his step is to protect the stigma, or seed-bearing part of the plant, from chance self-fertilization. This precaution must be taken when the condition of the stigma indicates that it is ready to receive pollen. When the ends open and become sticky with a honey-like substance to which the pollen will adhere readily, that time has arrived.

The hybridizer chooses a single blossom, preferably the lowest for early maturity, and removes the remainder of the spike. He then cuts away the petals close to the throat of the flowerlet, lest flecks of pollen already be deposited on these. The stigma and three stamens are now easily accessible. The latter, with their anthers, are removed with the aid of a small pair of tweezers. These pollen-bearing parts may be used to fertilize another plant or be discarded.

The whole success of the fertilization depends on the transfer of pollen from the stamens of one chosen plant to the protected stigma of another. Three methods are in common use. A camel's hair brush may be used provided it is dipped in denatured alcohol after each transfer. Toothpicks are convenient. They may be used once and discarded, and have the added advantage of making possible the removal of pollen before the anthers have opened, the pollen being quite as effective when extracted in this way. Perhaps the simplest means of transferring this is by removing the stamens from one plant and gently rubbing or shaking the pollen from them to the protected stigma of another.

Protecting the Flowers

POST-HYBRIDIZING protection and marking are accomplished by one operation. A strong paper bag should be drawn, inverted, over the fertilized stigma and securely tied about the stalk of the spike.

On this bag the cross made and the date are marked, with the name of the seed-bearing plant first. Thus, in a cross of the pollen from Aida, medium blue, onto the stigma of Heavenly Blue, light blue, the bag should be marked Heavenly Blue x Aida, with the date.

A swelling will be noticed in the seed pod at the base of the stigma if it is examined in a few days. The seed pod should be picked when it begins to split at the top, and, after curing in a light-bottomed container placed in a sunny window, stored until planting time in the Spring.

Lesser Known Bulbous Plants for the Garden

By DEAN HALLIDAY

MANY of my readers ask from time to time if there are other Summer flowering bulbous plants which they can grow, besides gladioli and lilies.

There are quite a number of flowering plants offered as Summer flowering bulbs, and which should be more generally grown in amateurs' gardens. Among these are the tigridia, or shell flower, which can be handled like the gladioli, and will provide an abundance of crimson and yellow flowers throughout the Summer, and the tuberose.

Peruvian Daffodil

ANOTHER good sort is the Ismene, or Peruvian daffodil, which can be depended upon to produce lots of fragrant amaryllis-like, pure white flowers. These bulbs can be taken up in October, given a rest of a few weeks, and then flower in pots indoors or stored over winter for next year.

Probably the most striking Summer flowering bulbous plant is the hyacinthus candicans or cape hyacinth. It produces a candelabra arrangement of twenty to thirty bell-shaped, pure white flowers on a stem four or five feet tall. The bulbs may also be treated like gladioli, and can be depended upon over a long flowering period.

Collects Parasites in Hungary to Attack Canadian Pests

A BRITISH scientist, sent to Koenigsmet, Hungary, by the British Museum, has solved the unemployment problem for a number of villages in this vicinity by putting hundreds of natives to work collecting cocoons of the Lophyrus caterpillar.

Dr. Kenneth Morris arrived there three weeks ago, charged by the Canadian Government with the task of discovering a remedy against the dread Lophyrus plague, which already has destroyed some 6,000 square miles of forest in Canada. The Lophyrus kills a tree in a comparatively short time.

Dr. Morris' first step was to determine upon a sure-fire remedy, and research revealed that a certain rare parasite alone would be most practical. This parasite, entering the cocoon of the Lophyrus, kills them and then deposits its eggs therein. A single cocoon, contaminated with these parasites, quickly spreads death to hundreds of other Lophyrus in that area.

Dr. Morris found that the death-dealing parasites of the Lophyrus could be obtained only around here, where they thrive by the thousands and, incidentally, safeguard the trees. Since his arrival here, he has already sent 130,000 infested cocoons to Canada, but hundreds of thousands more are wanted.

Saskatchewan Farmer Is Developing Hardy Varieties of Fruits

FRESH fruit, picked off the trees and bushes as in the Niagara Peninsula and on the Pacific Coast, may soon be the good fortune of wheat farmers of Saskatchewan.

Sixteen years of experimenting with various fruits—apples, crabapples, plums, cherries—has led Dr. Seeger Wheeler, five times winner of the international wheat king title at Chicago's annual grain show, to be more than optimistic about fruit growing on the Prairies.

Back in 1911 Dr. Wheeler stepped into prominence by winning the wheat sweepstakes at Chicago. He did it again in 1914, 1915, 1916 and 1918 to establish a record for individual winning of the title. And then he turned to fruit cultivation. He still grows all kinds of grains, but fruit has become his pet.

Much to Be Done Yet

ON his farm he has thirty acres of fruit under cultivation. For several years he has produced plums, cherries and crabapples without failure. Two years ago his orchard produced over three tons of plums and cherries. He strongly favors establishment of fruit experimental stations to speed up the work and teach farmers the art of growing fruit. Much work is still needed before fruit growing on the Prairies will be general.

Dr. Wheeler tested 103 varieties of standard apples. Only two of these were satisfactory, but he believes breeding would produce more varieties suitable to climate and soil. Of sixty-six varieties of crabapples, he found thirteen that were equal to any sold on the market. He tested fifty varieties of plums and found fifteen suitable. He had better luck with cherries, especially hybrids. He found four varieties of pears which might with further experimenting be made to grow well in the province.

Late Bloom Necessary

ALL the work he had done in fruit development, said Dr. Wheeler, was directed at finding varieties that were absolutely hardy and would withstand the severe climatic conditions of Western Winters. Saskatchewan fruit would have to come into bloom late enough to escape spring frosts and ripen before Autumn frosts come. These requirements were met by many varieties.

Of the 478 pedigree swine registered during the month of June by the Canadian National Records and approved by the Dominion Minister of Agriculture, 581 were Yorkshire; fifty-three Berkshire; forty-five Tamworth; twenty-two Chester White; four Poland China, and one Duroc Jersey. The registrations of pedigree horses numbered 251, of which 102 were Percherons; and of the 2,567 cattle registered, 1,632 were Ayrshire. Other registrations were 410 sheep, twenty-eight foxes; 661 dogs; one poultry, and eleven goats (seven Toggenburg and four Saanen).

New British Pictures Include American Play "Brewster's Millions"

BY JOAN LITTLEFIELD
(Copyright, 1934, by The North American Newspaper Alliance, Inc.)

LONDON.—Production has now begun at the British and Dominion studios at Boreham Wood on two important pictures.

The first is "Brewster's Millions," starring Jack Buchanan, which has two Hollywood personalities, Thornton Freeland and Chick McGill, as its director and cameraman. This is based on the well-known American play, but it has, in addition, a special musical setting providing songs and dances for Jack Buchanan and Lili Damita. The composers are George Formby and Ray Noble.

It is said that the girls who will figure in "Brewster's Millions" are the most beautiful to appear in a British film. Over a thousand applicants were interviewed for the 150 girls required for the picture, and they will figure in some novel dance sequences.

ELABORATE SETTING
Though the film is to be an in-imate comedy with music, it will have some elaborate settings. Chick McGill has been to Corsica to take background scenes, and on the new ten-acre lot recently acquired by B. D. & Co. a Georgian market square, based on that at Ajaccio, is being constructed. Much of the action will take place on two luxury yachts. L. P. Williams, who started the fashion for the ten-acre lot, is setting out to achieve an entirely new note in modern design in the interior sets of the picture.

The cast includes Nancy O'Neill, Amy Veness, Sydney Fairbrother, Althea Matthews, Lawrence Hanray and Anthony Holles.

The second big picture which B. D. & Co. are making is a screen adaptation of Savoir's "The Milky Way." Its film title has not yet been chosen but a unit has already gone to Paris for exterior scenes. The stars of this picture are Sir Cedric Hardwicke and Marie Glory, a continental star now making her British film debut.

Russian Epic and—A Sinister Drama

BY MARION T. ANOUS
"All Quiet on the Western Front" (Patnam), by Mikhail Sholokhov, translated from the Russian by Stephen Garry.

This book is a truly moving and beautiful story of the Don Cossacks. It comprises nearly eight hundred pages and covers the period just prior to the war, the war itself, the revolution and the civil war. It portrays forcefully the life of the Don Cossacks, their ideas, ambitions, limitations, and simplicity. Contrary to popular conception, the Cossack was not a warlike man, except his own personal possessions were threatened; he was wedded to his life upon the steppes with its seasonal labor and simple, primitive pleasures. He went unwillingly to undergo his compulsory military training; he returned joyfully to his village with its rigors and limiting existence.

Throughout the story the river Don flows peacefully or stormily or is besieged by the ice according to the season.

The story is woven upon the daily existence of the family of Panteleimon Prokhorovich. Panteleimon, a Cossack with Turkish blood and the people of high or low estate whose lives influence or cross those of the Melekhov family. All the basic emotions are powerfully depicted for life upon the banks of the Don is stark and natural. The old Cossack ideals away the people until more potent force like lust, hate, greed or fear directs their emotional or physical activities along dark channels.

The main character is Gregor Melekhov, son of old Panteleimon. As a very young man, he was attracted to Aksinia, wife of Stepan Antakhov, and as Stepan was away on military duty, it was inevitable that the lovers should come together. Their liaison was so open that it became a village scandal and was relayed to Stepan in his far-off training quarters. Gregor was very humiliated by his son's actions, and arranged a marriage between Gregor and Natalia, daughter of the well-to-do Korshunov family.

The marriage was a failure and Gregor and Aksinia eloped. The story moves from there through Gregor's war experiences and his efforts to sift the truth about the monarchy, the Reds and the counter-revolution. Various other loves, of varying intensity, run through the book and contrast strongly with the horrors of war.

The book is beautifully written and contains very odd metaphors. One example, describing a September day on the Don, is quoted: "... a milky, gossamer web, fine as cotton, was floating over the village of Tatarsk. The anaemic sun was smiling like a widower, the stern, virginal blue sky was repellently clean and proud. Beyond the Don the forest pined a jaundiced yellow, the ash gleamed pallidly, the oak dropped rare, figured leaves..."

One reading should not suffice for this book. It can be read again and again, and each time will bring new beauties and emotions to the reader. If the autumn time is so filled that only one book can be read, by all means make it "All Quiet on the Western Front."

"Whispering Tongues" (Doubleday & Doran), by Laurence Kirk.

It seemed to the interested people of Brackenbury, a quiet English village, that little Harry Forster-Daintree was hardly man enough to kill his wife, Millie. True he was a confirmed philanderer, but that didn't make a man vicious. Equally true was the fact that Millie was a dictatorial semi-invalid—but Harry was a weakling whose life would be always guided by some strong-minded woman.

However, as the trial proceeded things did look black for Harry and a net was woven firmly around his very ineffectuality. The blackest thing was his very speedy remarriage to the disreputable and dictatorial Millie, who, in her own mind, was firmly convinced Harry had poisoned Millie in order to marry her.

When the jury surprisingly turned in a verdict of "Not Guilty," poor little Harry found that, though

Death Claims Well-Known Authoress

MRS. MARY AUSTIN

Famed American authoress, with more than a score of books to her credit, who died at her home in Santa Fe, N.M., at the age of sixty-five. She was at work on a sequel to her "Starry Adventure," published in 1931, when death came to her in her sleep. She had been in ill health for many months. She lived for many years near Bakersfield, Cal. She was a close friend of Jack London, H. G. Wells and the late George Sterling. She is best remembered for "Starry Adventure" and "The Man Who Didn't Believe in Christmas."

Shakespeare Is Promised To Broadway

(Copyright, 1934, by The North American Newspaper Alliance, Inc.)

NEW YORK.—Keeping an ear close to Rialto cement, one can hear the stately tread of a figure who has been marching down the halls of time something over 300 years. No less than four productions of the well-known efforts of William Shakespeare are promised Broadway audiences during the coming season. The rumors are that Mr. Shakespeare will be ably supported by Shakespeare's "Romeo and Juliet" will be, according to all accounts, the apex of a triangle. Eva Le Gallienne and Katharine Cornell have each chosen this play as a vehicle for their personalities, and each being notoriously determined, there will be two offerings of "Romeo and Juliet." It is not at all unlikely that the two productions will run side by side, separated not at all in point of time and only by a city block in point of space.

REPEAT OTHELLO

Then a move is on foot to induce Walter Huston to repeat his "Othello," which delighted so many Central City, Colo., audiences during July and the first two weeks of August. And Mr. Huston, who expressed himself as not at all bashful. Finally, a Mr. Michael MacLiammoir, of the Gate Theatre, Dublin, has been pondering the melancholy mutability of the flesh in Northwestern Illinois, where he is said to be polishing up a "Hamlet" which will reveal points about the great Dane alleged to be new to Broadway.

Two of these performers at least—the Misses Le Gallienne and Cornell—have discovered that Shakespeare was a showman, that he wrote hard-fisted melodramas, that he paced his shows breathlessly and that he packed, as they say, a wallop. Their productions of "Romeo and Juliet" stressed these commercial requisites and suffered not one whit by it.

Gardeias Drape This New Dancer

CHICAGO.—An epidemic of dance has been out here. Since Louis B. Mayer, head of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, has left his studio Jack Cummings, Ruth Cummings, and Mimi Cummings.

Carl Laemmle and his son Carl Junior dominate Universal with the aid of Ernest L. Frank (Laemmle), Edward Laemmle, William W. W. Cummings, and Stanley Bergerman, all relatives.

Irving Thalberg is a producer, his wife, Norma, acts, his sister, Sylvia, a screen writer and novelist, her husband is a supervisor and Douglas Shearer, another of the family's relatives, is chief of sound in their studio.

The three families are outstanding, but far from unique. In all large studios a careful check of the personnel revealed the same condition.

Ann Harding and Horton in M.G.M.

For the first time since "Holiday," one of the early and most successful talking pictures, Ann Harding and Edward Everett Horton are to appear in the same film, under the direction of Edward H. Griffith.

This was determined when Horton, one of the industry's ace comedy stars, was signed by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer for the role of Nolan in "Biography of a Bachelor," in which Miss Harding and Robert Montgomery will be co-starred.

"BRITISH AGENT" RELEASE
First National has fixed September 13 as the date for the international release of its forthcoming special production of "British Agent," which stars Kay Francis and Leslie Howard.

Follow Dads To Find Fame On the Stage

NEW YORK.—With a rich heritage of family theatrical tradition, a new generation of actors has come to Broadway to seek fame on its own behind the footlights where their fathers and mothers won acclaim.

Two generations of actors have stemmed from the debonair John Drew—first the Barrymores, now the Colles—and Pat Rooney 2nd, and Pat Rooney 3rd, have followed in the stage footsteps of Pat the 1st.

Fred Stone's three children have turned to the theatre, as have two of George M. Cohan's children, and his son, George Jr., now in school, has voiced theatrical aspirations also.

There is no ready road to fame on the stage, but the children of famous thespians, for the most part, have been spared the long years of obscurity which, almost without exception, their parents endured.

Old World Korans Are Exhibited

LONDON.—The world's most splendid books are the ancient Persian copies of the Koran, according to Dr. Arthur Upham Pope, director of the American Institute for Persian Art and Archaeology, who has just returned from his fifth survey of the art treasures of that country.

"Strange as it may sound, coming from one who has been studying Persian art for many years," remarks Dr. Pope, "this trip has been a revelation to me."

For it was permitted to examine and photograph the famous MSS. in the library of the fabulously rich and fanatically guarded Shrine of Imam Riza in Mashad, the holiest place in all Persia. With the exception of a few pieces which were loaned to the London exhibition of Persian Art in 1931, these MSS. had never before been examined by any Western scholar, and I was astonished at the beauty and opulence of these books.

9,000 KORANS
The library includes about 9,000 Korans—the gifts of a Jorth line of Persian Shahs and Indian Princes—many of them valued by the Shrine authorities in excess of $100,000 each.

"In some of them a single page took the artist several years to do. In one case, the artist worked seven years on the frontpiece alone, without being able to finish it. Some of the tooled book covers have required over half a million separate impressions to complete; as each operation requires an exquisitely accurate and delicate touch, the books took many years to complete. For sheer power and opulence, these MSS.—especially those of the 14th and 15th centuries—have never been surpassed."

Wrapped Up in Pythons

Rinnie Barnes wears that coat, made of four immense python skins, in the new British film, "Forbidden Territory." It is said to be the only coat of its kind in the world. The film star's hat is made of stitched angora felt trimmed with python skin.

Hinted Boycott Compels Clean-Up

Hollywood is finding detours around the slums of sin for its sirens of the screen following threatened boycott by the League of Decency and other church groups clamoring for a curb on the movies. Projected pictures in which the specialists above were to appear in glamorous roles and glorifications of the underworld are reported under revision, and several of them have been cancelled. For instance, Norma Shearer, criticized in "Riposte," is due now for a nice part in "The Barretts of Wimpole Street." Movie magnates are worrying about how to cast Mae West, Greta Garbo, Joan Crawford, Jean Harlow and Marlene Dietrich, others who have been starred in the primrose path of pictures.

Art Treasures Used In Taking 'Don Juan'

LONDON.—The last scenes of "The Private Life of Don Juan" were shot in a heat wave on an enormous exterior set, covering more than an acre of ground, which represented a square in Seville. This was one of the largest sets ever constructed in this country. Ned Mann, the Hollywood constructional expert, collaborated with Vincent Korda in the building of it, in the studio workshop.

In the foreground was a wide fountain, on one side a beautiful shrine with an effigy of the Virgin; and at the far end of the Square a huge statue of a horseman typical of many to be seen in Spain. This was thirty feet high and weighed over fifteen tons. A broad flight of steps led to the city's turreted walls, and in the distance was a great clock tower with bells which chimed.

OVER 400 PLAYERS
Douglas Fairbanks, Benita Hume and over 400 players took part in these scenes, in which six old-time landaus, each pulled by two horses, were used.

Among the many art treasures used for the interior scenes of "Don Juan" is a tapestry, valued at $5,000, which hangs behind the Don's bed. This measures twelve by eighteen feet and is in Brussels weave, with the picture after Raphael. It represents the Acts of the Apostles and came from a Spanish Palace about a hundred years ago.

Don Juan's house is also furnished with a beautifully carved Spanish bed in pine wood and a unique oil painting of a Spanish nobleman attributed to Zurbarán.

FACTS DISCOVERED
During their researches into the life of Don Juan, Mr. Korda and his colleagues discovered the following facts:

"In the British Museum are 200 volumes dealing with the exploits of Don Juan."

"Forty-two plays have been written about the Don."

"The real name of the Don, who was a real person living in Seville, feels satisfied that, as far as it lies in his power to judge, it is first-class entertainment."

WORKS FOR PART
In the case of original script—"Voltaire," "The House of Rothschild," and now, his present production, "Wellington," while it is not intended to convey the impression that Mr. Arliss is personally responsible for the scenario of the story, he does so much research work on it, reading up every bit of history, letters, eyewitness accounts of the period, assimilating all knowledge connected with it, that naturally such efforts generally result in fresh insights, or particular, which must be of incalculable value to various performances and characterizations. His study, at these times, is crowded by correspondence, maps, prints, and various authorities, and really might be a museum!

A remark which, if it had been overheard, might have conveyed the impression that the speaker had a lazy nature, was made a few days ago by Mr. Arliss while enjoying a few minutes' absolute relaxation. "I wish I were just a snail, or a slug on one of the cabbage leaves! Fancy having nothing to do but crawl about a green leaf; no business, no worries! Not even to have to think!" And yet, he had risen early, spent an isolated morning in his study, religiously denying temptation (to him) of a stroll round his lovely garden, and put in several hours deep, intensive labor.

No, it's not luck, it's application. It's concentration, it's getting his teeth into it that has got George Arliss where he is today.

Ask Right To Depict Casement

DUBLIN.—Carl Laemmle and Universal Pictures Corporation announce in the Free State they propose to make a film depicting the life of "The Great Irish Patriot" Sir Roger Casement. They have appealed to Republican organizations to supply manuscript and data.

Casement was tried and executed during the war for treason following his efforts while a British soldier to procure German aid for an Ireland rebellion. The uniform worn by his "Irish Brigade" was recently adopted for the new Free State Volunteer Force.

Church Holds Large Array Of Paintings

AUGSBURG.—The ancient Dominican Church (it dates back to 1512) is housing in its lofty interior a collection of paintings and specimens of plastic art of the baroque and rococo schools that is the largest of its kind ever seen in Germany. The collection contains 180 paintings, 177 plastic works and 531 drawings and sketches.

From Adam to Zick and from Albrecht to Straub, all the masters of these styles of painting and sculpture are represented in uninterrupted sequence. In addition to splendid examples from the South German schools, there are works from Dresden and Austria and from the schools of Sweden, Italy and other countries.

Schoolgirl's Dream Of Saxon Invasion Wins School Contest

LONDON.—Doreen Peel, an eleven-year-old schoolgirl, had a vivid dream and was able to recall it and thus won for the Marylebone Central Girls' School first prize in the "Saxon Invasion" story competition. The school received a silver cup.

This annual competition is open to the 10,000 London elementary school children who attend official lectures in the London Museum and who write about exhibits that have most interested them.

Doreen, greatly impressed by the tableau of the Saxon invasion of London, dreamed that night that she saw the real assault, and when she awoke she wrote her dream down, describing the panic beginning inside the town, the galleys anchoring at the water's edge, the glittering of the soldiers' armor, the attack on the barricade and the invaders' fierce attack upon the Britons when the gate was broken down and the firing of the looted city.

OXFORD, England.—The third annual festival of the English Verse-Speaking Association is being held at Oxford this week-end, but the speakers' speeches will not be their own. They will be competitors in oratory, and they will submit their powers to a panel of highly qualified judges, including George Bottomley, Laurence Binyon, both well-known authors.

ORATE IN VERSE AT OXFORD FETE

PLAYING IN JUVENILE
Lee Crowe, Universal's latest juvenile discovery, has been chosen for the male lead in "Secrets of the Chateau," by L. G. Blochman. This is the first Lou Ostrow production for Universal, and went into work this week under the direction of Richard Thorpe at Universal City.

Woman, Ninety-Three, Appearing in Movie
To become a moving picture star at ninety-three years of age is the extraordinary experience of Miss Eleanor La Roche, of Australia. The second daughter and sole remaining child of Charles Joseph La Roche, first Governor of Victoria, she now faces a movie camera for the first time in her life. The picture she is appearing in has been produced in connection with the centenary celebrations. Featuring historical incidents, it depicts much of Victoria's early colonization.

Beards Popular In Art Classes
MANCHESTER, England.—Visitors to the presentation of diplomas at the Royal College of Art were astonished at the sight of so many of the younger curates, who might have stepped from the pages of Henri Matisse or George du Maurier.

There were beards plain, beards curled, long beards, short beards, silken and bristling beards, yellow beards, black and brown beards—with noble, curling cascades of hair to match on the top of the head.

The older artists as a rule have given up growing beards and letting their hair hang long at the back.

GAITY IN VIENNA
Since the opening of her Summer festival, Vienna has become gay again, dining and dancing in the open air, especially at her most attractive bay on the Hoberal, the height in the tree-covered hills outside the city. Here one can look down from the terrace on the twinkling lights of the city itself, the illuminated big wheel of the Prater, Vienna's world-famous amusement park, and see the winding Danube and the violet mountains in the distance. Evening dress is not obligatory anywhere.

Scarlet and Gold on Big Ben Is Part of Brighter Metropolis

Face of Famous Clock Remains Same as in 1860—Postoffice Pen Still Defeats Aim of London's Renovations

LONDON.—We often hear talk about making a "Brighter London," but it is very seldom that officialdom talks about it, to say nothing of doing anything. Usually our departments are of the kill-joy "thou shalt not" attitude of mind. So it was all the more surprising to the public the other day when "Big Ben"—the great clock of Westminster—threw off the overcoat of scaffolding which he had worn for several months, to find him in a brilliant garment of scarlet and gold.

SPOT OF COLOR
At first thought one would suppose that scarlet and gold decoration would hardly be a good opportunity to place in just a few days to a great neo-Gothic building of old and new grey-fawn-brown stone. But actually, and even in the bright sun we enjoy just now, it is surprisingly effective. In the gloom of winter we shall just be able to find a spot of color by looking at Big Ben.

So let us praise the Office of Works for this present amenity, but not for being original. Apparently some one in that department thought that as Big Ben's "innards" have now been thoroughly overhauled it would be a good opportunity to tilt him by making up his face. Hence the present glory. The records were searched and the result is that we of 1934 see the great clock face exactly as did our London forefathers of 1860.

IMPROVE POSTOFFICE
This inclination towards official brightness seems to have had its origin in the postoffice under the extremely successful and go-ahead control of the present postmaster-general, the most enterprising minister and the greatest producer of financial surpluses who has ever held that office. During his "reign" he has boosted the postoffice services in every possible way. Quite apart from the big matters of administration he has found time to improve the postoffice in many places to such an extent that one felt an urge to go in and buy unwanted stamps, or postal orders, just for the pleasure of doing so.

Thus far, only one thing has defeated him—the postoffice pen. And now the day of that accursed implement as known to generations is nearly over.

STEALING THE PENS
Inexplicable as it may seem, the public has always insisted on stealing the postoffice pens. Last year, in London alone, out of an issue of 2,000 penholders and 9,000 stainless steel nibs, 1,200 vanished in one month. At Bournemouth, Cardiff, Croydon, Scarborough, Swansea, Torquay and Glasgow every pen disappeared. Only one spot in England stood out proudly as the City of Honesty. It was Chelmsford. It had not lost one single pen. Its pens were chained to the wall.

And now we are able to have an issue of 10,000 special pens as a trial. They will be of the bright official postoffice vermilion like our pillar boxes, and will bear the postoffice monogram. All losses will be notified and there will be "honesty competitions" between post offices. Hopes in view of past history the description of the new pens is not too happily expressed. The penholders are said to be "specially moulded" so that they will be easy to move.

CLAIM AIRPLANES SPREAD DISEASES

Rapid Transit Makes It Possible for Infection to Be Carried Without Detection

LONDON.—The first world-wide attempt to prevent the spread of disease by aeroplane is being made by the International Sanitary Convention for Aerial Navigation.

The Convention, signed by representatives of twenty-three countries at The Hague in April, has not yet been ratified by the British Government. It lays down regulations designed to avert the growing menace of the spread of infectious diseases—such as plague, cholera, typhus, small-pox and yellow fever—by means of the rapidly increasing network of world airways.

DANGERS EXIST
Hitherto slower means of travel have enabled such diseases to be localized. Today, with the much more rapid air transport, it would be possible for a person infected with one of these dread diseases to travel from one country to another and to pass on the disease to hundreds of others before it became manifest. The regulations include the provision of sanitary organizations for all aerodromes, equipment for the examination and isolation of passengers and disinfection of aircraft, where conditions require, and the extermination of disease carriers, such as rats and insects.

Motor Bike Shows Is London Scheme

LONDON.—Olympia will be the mecca of the motorcycling world this autumn. Motorcyclists, cyclists and trade buyers from the United States, all the principal European countries, the Dominions and Colonies, are expected at the 18th International Bicycle and Motorcycle Show, which opens November 5.

British Tars Playing at New War Game

Don't Worry, They Are "Just Playing at War." The British Navy, as Well as the Army, Is Instructed in the Use of Gas Masks and, in Order to Familiarize Themselves With Them, They Go Through Strenuous Exercise During Anti-Gas Drill. A Group of the Tars Are Seen Sprinting Along the Forward Deck With Their Equipment.

CLAIMS BONES ARE OF OLD IRISH ELK

DUBLIN.—Head and antlers of a giant Irish elk, dug up in Ballybeg Bog, near Dublin, have been placed in the Free State National Museum.

Professor Knud Jessen and H. Jonassen, of the botany section of Copenhagen University, who are studying Irish peat strata, made the discovery, and museum authorities estimate that the elk lived between 20,000 B.C. and 40,000 B.C. Near the bones were the remains of an Arctic fox or hare, also buried since the Ice Age.

NO PURPLE ROOFS OR SHAM TIMBER

LONDON.—Plans for preserving the amenities of the countryside were revealed by Lord Leverhulme at a meeting in London, where he spoke of a ban on sham timber and the prohibition of purple roofs on his Cheshire estate.

"On my estate in Cheshire," he said, "I have a rule that no building may be erected on any land I sell or lease without the plans and elevations being approved by my advisory architect."

Some conditions Lord Leverhulme imposes are yellow bricks are not to be used in the elevations; terra-cotta, glazed or hard patent bricks are not to be used in face work; purple slates are not permitted on roofs; all half-timber work must be properly constructed and finished together, and must not be sham; and no colored glass shall be permitted in the windows.

Within reasonable limits, his lordship added, a great deal could be done to prevent some of the bad development at present taking place.

Charles Dillon, One-Time Music Hall Artist, Dead

Charles Dillon is dead. He has died in London in poverty, forgotten by the thousands who used to laugh at his quips and his comic songs in the far-off "good old days" of the English music-hall.

Londoners of today know nothing of Charles Dillon. His name is not a music-hall legend like the names of Leno, Marie Lloyd and Albert Chevalier, but in the days when these great stars were "topping the bill" Dillon's name was far below.

Charles Dillon died at the age of fifty-eight in a Highgate hospital after refusing to have a doctor so as to avoid putting an extra burden of expense on his wife, who shared his fight with poverty.

For the past nine years he and

Air Mail Services for Great Britain Increase

Sir H. Kingsley Wood, Postmaster-General, in a statement recently, revealed important plans for the forthcoming large-scale development of inland air mail services in Great Britain. They include:

Regular daily services to be begun between London, Birmingham, Manchester, Belfast, Glasgow, Liverpool, Cardiff, Plymouth, Southampton and the Isle of Man next month.

Appointment of an air mail adviser to the Post Office. Increase in the number of blue air mail letter boxes and a speed-up in collections.

The plans of the Post Office are dependent on the new air services which the railways are inaugurating this month. As soon as they are in operation, the new air mails will take advantage of them.

NO EXTRA CHARGE
"We shall start the services to the cities mentioned so far as the flying times permit of practical use being made of them," said Sir Kingsley. "Exact particulars will be issued as soon as the arrangements are complete."

"There will be no extra charge for letters weighing not more than 2 ozs. or for postcards."

"The only condition is that the blue air mail label shall be put on letters intended for air transmission, and that they be marked 'By Air Mail.' The rate for letters beyond 2 ozs. will be 1d. per oz."

"To ensure that the Post Office is kept in the closest touch with air developments, I have arranged, after consultation with the Air Minister, to appoint an Air Mail Adviser."

"He will have definite executive rank in the Post Office."

"It will be his duty to keep in close liaison with the Air Ministry and with other agencies concerned with air mail matters."

"I hope that his assistance will enable every advantage to be taken of the increased speed of the aeroplane, where it can benefit the postal user, and that the mails will be able to play their full part in the development of air transport in this country."

"Also I am proposing to add two extra members to the Advisory Council, and with their assistance to form a small air panel which I can consult from time to time in regard to air mail questions."

Slaps a Constable
LAHORE, India (CP).—Women car drivers here do not depend on a smile and a few soothing words to halt protestations of traffic police. An Anglo-Indian woman driver slapped a constable when asked to stop while oncoming traffic passed. She was summoned to appear in court charged with assaulting a Government servant while carrying out his duty.

WALLS CRACKING IN ALL HALLOWS
Historic London Church, Built by Wren, Is Now Declared to Be Unsafe

LONDON.—Not since St. Paul's Cathedral was regarded as a "dangerous structure" and the building strengthened has there been another edifice built by the great Christopher Wren coming under that category. Now All Hallows Church, Lombard Street, London, is said to be cracked all out of upright or otherwise defective.

CAUSE OF DAMAGE
It is not difficult to trace the cause. Lombard Street has been largely rebuilt in the past seven years. Lloyd's Bank and Martin's Bank replaced their modest buildings by huge new and heavy structures, for which deep foundations had to be cut, and the whole subsoil of the district must have been seriously affected. All Hallows was shored up during the work and a considerable sum spent in strengthening its wall and foundations, but apparently not enough has been done.

It is a Wren church, erected on the site of a medieval church destroyed in the Great Fire. Alexander Barclay, author of "The Ship of Fools," was its rector, and John Wesley preached one of his first sermons there.

One meditation shows the cleric passing money across a table. The next shows him clothed in the full robes of a bishop with hands joined in prayer, and the last one is a picture of the completed cathedral. Professor Tristram says the paintings may last another 100 years.

WORKED TOGETHER
"We used to work together in the same hall—doing single turns. I was a serio-comic and he did his patter and sang the popular comic songs of the day. He used to get a laugh the moment he came on—he always gave a plaintive sort of baa—like a sheep."

Mrs. Dillon recalled how she and her husband met at the music-hall in Maidenhead thirty-nine years ago. "This was me then," she said, showing me two faded photographs of a pretty, round-faced girl with long golden curls and three white plumes in her hair. "I was playing the 'Sleeping Beauty' then."

"That was a daring costume for those days," she added, smiling reminiscently at her spangled tunic, "but nowadays it would be considered very dull."

There is no place today for the stars of the old-time music-hall. "Charles and I tried to adapt ourselves to the times, to get work of some sort, but the old names mean nothing to modern managers. The last thing my husband did that was of any real importance was with Mr. Seymour Hicks in 'Old Bill.' But when the run of that was ended the struggle was on again."

SHOULD DOCTORS HAMPER PATIENTS?

BOURNEMOUTH.—Attitude of a doctor whose patient consults another practitioner was discussed at the British Medical Association meeting.

The main point was whether the second doctor ought to inform the first that he had been approached by the patient and whether, if the patient did not agree to his communicating with the first, he should refuse to attend the patient.

One doctor said no proposals which would have the effect of hampering patients from going from one doctor to another would be accepted by the public.

PRETTY THIEVES ROB MAGISTRATE

Two pretty women thieves in all the glamour of a motor-car with a liveried chauffeur drove to the house of J. Hodge, chairman of the Wealdstone Petty Sessions, and left with a quantity of valuable silver.

Mr. Hodge's home is at Northwood, Cuckoo Hill Road, Pinner, Middlesex, where a servant opened the door as the women arrived and asked to see Mr. Hodge.

"Mr. Hodge is not at home," said the maid.

"May we wait?" they asked, and sat down.

Shortly afterwards the women let themselves out, and when the maid looked out of the window she saw the car being driven away.

She became suspicious, and when she searched the room where the women had been she found a silver salver, an ink-well, and other silver articles missing.

Ancient Designs Prove Cathedral Built on Penance

NORWICH.—Wall paintings 900 years old have just come to light in Norwich Cathedral as the result of restoration work by Professor Tristram, of the Royal College of Art.

Especially interesting are three medallions supposed to depict the life story of the cathedral founder, Bishop Herbert de Losinga. The paintings bear out in a remarkable way the tradition that Losinga built the cathedral as a penance for buying the bishopric.

Dean Inge May Enter Political Life of England

Famous Dean Said to Be Seriously Thinking About Becoming Candidate for Parliament—Critic Pictures Churchman in New Role—Continues to Preach to Crowds

By HARRY LEVEN
(Central Press Canadian Correspondent)

LONDON.—"Gloomy" Dean Inge, who recently gave up his office in St. Paul's Cathedral, is seriously thinking of becoming a candidate for Parliament. All of England probably would view with a kind of fascinated horror the spectacle of the doleful churchman standing up in the House of Commons in an official capacity and blasting forth again at some sentimental or traditional fancy that the dean thinks is "baloney," to use a slang phrase.

CRITIC FOR DECADES
Reverend W. R. Inge has been calling many things in the world "baloney" in his acid and witty style for a couple of decades. There are two men in the world whom people like to see in verbal action. One is the dean and the other is George Bernard Shaw, fellow countryman of Dean Inge.

But because the churchman has gone about in his official garb of black leggings, silk hat, clerical collar, with an open frock coat disclosing his robe and umbrella in hand, his performances in wit and denunciation have always enjoyed more audiences and response than the white-bearded Irishman.

During America's prohibition era, after returning from a tour in the States, the dean confessed to reporters that "he was quite glad to get back to the deanery's cellars."

The dean is famous for a dry and venomous humor that whirled daily. He is an ultra-Conservative, marking back to the puritanism of Oliver Cromwell, but even for stupid reactionaries he holds no brief.

DEMOCRACY "NIGHTMARE"
If he were a seer, most observers are agreed as to where "the fire-brand" will stand. He despises trade unions and socialism. Democracy for him is a "nightmare," and has looted the accumulations of Queen Victoria's reign. Like many other brilliant European thinkers, he believes the white race is doomed by the yellow.

For Germany, he long has had much admiration. Its government under the ex-kaiser, he believes, was the best in the world. He is contemptuous of the "mob" he has only contempt for advance movements of eugenic societies. He blames most of the world's miseries on the lack of check on the birth rate of the lower classes which continue to propagate and increase the number of "ignorant people."

Despite his resignation from St. Paul's, he continues to preach and the crowds flock to hear him. Almost stone-deaf, the thin-lipped dean reads his sermons from the pulpit, almost completely indifferent to his surroundings or to the mood of the congregation.

And though he despises the "mass" ideas on the left, his biting tongue also unites for the right partisans. Capitalism, imperialism, the idle rich, the plutocrats, government, anti-vaccinationists, whippings in school—all come before him for comment and disapproval.

LANDING PLACE
The history of these steps or "stairs" is interesting. In the days of the Knights Templars the river came up to the temple walls, or water gates and a sort of pier jutted out into the river from which the Knights might embark and disembark. Centuries passed. The Order of the Knights Templars vanished; the name Temple remained. The lawyers took up residence. Then came the Act of Parliament of 1867 "For Embanking the North Side of the River Thames," which embankment and its roadway necessarily cut off the temple from direct access to the river's edge. So in the Act was incorporated a clause which gave the temple a landing place on the Embankment in exchange for their ancient rights.

Probably not one passer-by in a thousand ever notices—or notices, knows the meaning of the carvings on the stone at the top of the temple steps. They are the Lamb and Flag and the Winged Horse, the crests of the Middle and Inner Temple.

A merchant put a new boy to work the other day. The boy, on the next day, saw a 50-cent piece lying on the floor, and he promptly took it to his employer.

Merchant: "You're an honest boy. I put that money there to test you. Boy: "Yes, I thought you did."

Tin Hats of Army Days to Be Scrapped
LONDON.—The "tin hat," with which every soldier who served in the war is familiar, is out of date, and is to be replaced by a new shrapnel and bullet-resistant helmet made of a material of remarkable lightness and resilience.

The new helmet, which has impressed the Army Council, is made of a secret composition of metal, highly compressed cork is the main feature. Even a seven-pound hammer cannot make a dent in it, yet it weighs less than one-third of the old war-time tin hats.

Although the "tin hat" saved many soldiers from fatal injuries by shrapnel and bullets, it was useless against the high explosive shell, while the effect of the blow on the metal headgear was to render the wearer unconscious.

GAELIC IS POPULAR IN IRISH CHURCHES
DUBLIN.—Good progress has been made with the translation into Gaelic of the Book of Common Prayer and the translators have been authorized to proceed with work on the Book of Psalms in the Book. This was reported to the annual meeting of Cumann Gaeilgeach na h-Eaglaise—the Irish Guild of the Protestant Church of Ireland.

The services, which are conducted wholly in Irish on the first and fourth Sunday of each month in St. Patrick's Cathedral, Dublin, have become so popular, especially with the younger members, that the governing body has made arrangements for regular weekly services in the national language.

MAY ENTER FILMS
LONDON.—Hollywood has been outdone by a British film producer, who, it is said, is trying to coach John McGovern, a Clydebank M.P., to take the part of a workman in a stirring film drama having for its centrepiece the turmoil of British politics.

What's New and Interesting for the Women

Paris Hints Ankle Shoes Coming Back for Autumn

By MARTHA MARLOWE
NEW YORK.—The cool breezes of Fall fashions are a more than welcome arrival in a city that is sweltering in an old-fashioned heat wave. New York's fashion belt, the Fifth Avenue shops from Thirty-Fourth to Forty-second Streets, has been invaded by the new styles, and already shopping talk has turned from bathing bandannas and sandals to dresses and hats.

Stylists for leading department stores and exclusive shops are too busy creating new patterns to talk about them. But all agree that hats will be as radical this season as were the freakish offshoots of the famous Empress Eugenie hats several seasons back. Life for the well-dressed lady about town will be a bowl of berets. Yes, berets, every possible variation of them. Fashion importers completely let the bars down on immigrant berets from Paris, and from the looks of things at this writing, they will take the town by storm and make every feminine head bow in surrender.

Not the garden variety beret, but the novel species with all manner of original shapes and color combinations are going to be the rage. Ingenious designing plus black or green feathers running through them at a challenging angle have given the beret a wide range of appeal. They will be made chiefly of black felt or velvet, and worn in such a way as to expose one side of the head completely. It will take more than the usual amount of maneuvering to make them stay put.

BERETS HAVE COMPETITION
But berets will not have an uncontested and full monopoly of fashionable headgear. They will have to reckon with tricornes, which threaten to give them a vigorous fight for hat supremacy. The three-cornered, elegant, romantic, buttoned skirt. This is the word relic of the romantic seventeenth century, when it covered the uneasy heads of the courtiers in the French palace, will now be in the front ranks of fashionable society. Like the beret, the tricorn will return with many clever innovations and jagers. For instance, a popular type of tricorn is the model in which the third corner is reversed and worn in the back, while the square side is worn in front. The hat, made of black felt, has a narrow green wooden ribbon running around the crown and tying in a neat bow in front.

WORK DOWN OVER FACE

Another interesting style of tricorn is the oval with a forward-tipping line, which is turned down over the face. The oval tricorn can be used to best effect in wool-matching ensembles.

A hat which will attract more than usual attention is the derby of antique velvet with a small veil having red and white dots as trimming. In the matter of dresses for various occasions, fashion leaders have decreed that green will be the dominant color for the Fall and Winter. Light greens and yellow-greens will be featured in the early Fall, while the darker shades—bottle-green, coach-green—will headline the Winter apparel. And the greens will be employed in sportswear, evening dresses, and everyday lozes. In addition to greens, metallic greys and blues will also be widely shown.

The most radical changes in feminine fashion will be seen in shoes. If the reports from Paris are a fair barometer, the new footwear will be modeled on the pre-war fashions of the buttoned boot and covered ankle. Laced shoes with shiny hooks as accessories will be worn to harmonize with hooked dresses and buttoned skirts. This is the word from Paris, the oracle of fashion.

Lingerie Is Of Special Importance

Lingerie presents a problem in the summer, as the regular styles do not always fit under summer underwear, says an article in The Times (London). Manufacturers have been giving special attention to making cool and practical foundation garments and light cotton open-meshed materials have been combined with elastic. Two-way stretch elastic and latex are used for girdles to be worn under shorts and bathing suits. Braiders have the halter neckline, which is one of the most popular for sun-bathing suits, and slips have low-cut backs. There are lingerie sets in cotton voile and heliot, with dainty flowered designs for the very hot days, and dance sets in lace-trimmed lawn which are suitable for wearing under cotton and linen evening gowns.

For the early autumn, both day and evening dresses will have long, simple lines, with closely moulded effect at the shoulders, waist and hips. The lingerie worn under these gowns must be perfectly fitting. Satin and crepe de Chine will be used for daytime wear, cut on the bias so as to follow the lines of the figure; and untrimmed except for a narrow binding, finely stitched seams, and embroidered initial. Evening materials will be equally simple, and the materials will be georgette and triple nylon. To ensure smoothness, many garments will have waistbands and brassiere tops of silk latex fabrics.

In contrast to the simplicity of daytime lingerie, nightgowns are much trimmed with lace and fine hand-work. Tucks and smocking are used, and narrow pointed frills. Ruching and Valenciennes are the two most popular laces, the former in a deep ecru color, the latter dyed to match the material with which it is used. A blue georgette gown has a yoke of blue lace to match and a finely tucked centre panel holding wide mesh ends. A rose satin gown has a yoke of chiffon of the same color finely gathered into bands; the high waistline is finished with a satin mesh. White chiffon is used for a gown of Empire line, with smocking at the neck and waist. The hem, sleeves and mesh are finished with narrow frills.

For negligees, velvet and satin are always popular materials, but this autumn faille and brocades will be used. In addition to the more usual flat ruchings and fur and feather trimmings, matted flowers in self materials will be seen on collars, cuffs and revers. Smocking and gauging will trim capeslets and sleeves in the softer fabrics. For those who prefer dressy evening gowns, the tailored mannish type, plain heavy crepes and satins are used, as well as linen and fine flannel. There is also a great variety of colors and designs in foulards and tie silks. Black stockings have been mentioned for autumn wear, but warm browns, dark neutral beiges, gun-metal and mole greys, and even "off-black" tones are less heavy and can all be worn with all black street costumes. Deep copper-brown and chestnut shades look well with brown and green sport suits. For evening wear natural skin shades will remain the most popular.

Perforations, which women feel are cooler and therefore better for their feet, are being used on autumn lines of shoes.

Tiny Ruffled Capes Top Evening Gown

By MME. LISBETH
The classic lines of white for evening are greatly liked by our famous French couturiers. Molyneux likes them, and embodies them in the white dress of crepe, pictured left. It is set off with large black dots on a graceful waist-length cape of ruffled tulle. Maggy Rouff takes a waxy white tulle and lights it with a flame of tulle over each shoulder, as shown in the model at the right. The décolletage is new and square. And when the wearer walks, she leaves a wake of cool, white flounces trailing behind. This designer has found the little tulle capes so practical that she has used them on many of her youthful types of evening dresses. The sheath gown is being revived, suggesting the fashions of pre-war days. Agnes-Dreoul uses it in her Fall collection in velvets and satins, sometimes with décolletage low cut, in the back, sometimes with the back veiled with lace or spangled tulle. Another famous couturier, Lucille Paray, uses panner hip draperies for her evening gowns in her Fall line.

Select Clothes for College

COLLEGE girls' clothes have become so important in the fashion world that a leading magazine for women arranged for the first time the best and most approved styles in time to help girls make their selections. Miss Helen J. Kous, fashion director of the magazine, wanting a consensus of style opinion, asked a group of buyers from leading shops all over the country to co-operate with her in selecting what they considered the essentials of a college wardrobe so that girls anywhere could rely on it and follow its suggestions.

This group selected the tweed suit, the wool two-piece dress, the afternoon frock and the evening frock photographed here, and these models will be shown the first week in August on living models in New York and Philadelphia, Chicago and Los Angeles. The tweed three-piece suit, lined with jersey to match the blouse, second from right, was selected because it is practical and adaptable. The coat is long enough to be worn as a separate wrap over other dresses, and the skirt may be worn with a variety of blouses or sweaters. The coat is warm enough to be worn for all the early football games. It has the military air young people like, and is smartly pocketed and buttoned in the newest manner. The wool dress, left, was selected because it is the newest version of the two-piece outfit, with color contrast between the blouse and skirt. The Chinese note is reflected in the collar and the wide sleeves. It is buckled in the casual manner that college girls love. The afternoon dress of crepe-back satin, right, is the essence of what is new and smart. It features the contrast of dull and shiny material, has the new high neck and soft cowl, the yoke giving a drop shoulder effect and the wide armhole, and features the slim straight skirt line. The evening gown of taffeta, reflecting the Spanish influence, is daringly low and sophisticated. The shoulders are covered, and the skirt is tight about the hips and ruffled at the hem, so it is charming for walking or dancing. The velvet sash makes a smart fabric contrast with the taffeta, and the flowers at the shoulder add a festive note. Women summering at Newport, that smartest and most exclusive of resorts, wear the simplest of daytime frocks of dotted Swiss and numerous cotton fabrics, with corduroy, flannel and candlewick coats covering them. Jade and coral ornaments are the latest in jewelry.

Pioneer Recalls Good Old Days Of Life on Farm

NEW GERMANY, Ont. (CP).—In her ninetieth year and counting more great-grandchildren than years in her busy life, Mrs. Catharine Bruder has declared she will spend her remaining days in prayers for her family. This smiling old pioneer has lived to see 180 descendants. She has ten children. "Grossmutter" to 170 people, she confides that it takes most of the day to say a simple "Our Father" for each of her juniors. She feels her days will be well filled. There are sixty-three grandchildren, 101 great-grandchildren and six great-greats.

Born in Darmstadt, Hessen, Germany, as Catharine Fale, in 1845, she was brought by her parents to this country in 1847. The family settled in Preston, then a village in the Queen's bush. Discussing her childhood, Mrs. Bruder smilingly remarked that she had only attended day school for one day in her life. It was a Scotch school at New Dundee. "The other children couldn't understand my broken English and I was heart-broken. To make matters worse, when the master rang his bell, I was so nervous that I ran directly underneath his arm and the bell hit me, so hard that I bear the mark till this day." She left school and never mastered reading or writing.

Of late years this grandma to 170 has produced some beautiful needlework. She proudly exhibits pillowslips that exemplify her ability in the arts of crocheting and knitting. But in the years of her young womanhood she had little time to devote to the making of lace and embroideries. Before she was eighteen she married Joseph Bruder in St. Barnabas' Roman Catholic Church. Immediately afterwards she became immersed in many duties which fell to the lot of a farmer's wife in that period.

Mrs. Bruder would not have people imagine that pioneer farmers' wives lacked good times. There were always "bees," when neighbors gathered for work and fun; there were "sugaring off" parties in the woods, and there was the Guelph market to attend once, and sometimes twice a week.

Mrs. Bruder lived on the Bruder homestead for nearly forty years, leaving it when her husband died thirty-seven years ago. After that, she moved into New Germany, living in her own house and caring for her own garden for nearly thirty-four years. Residing with her daughter here, she is in possession of all her faculties.

TASTY DESSERT

A dessert that almost makes itself is individual refrigerator cakes. All you need is vanilla wafers, berries, and sweetened whipped cream. Pipe four wafers on each plate with a layer of sweetened fruit between, top with generous blobs of whipped cream and pile more berries on top of that. If you prefer the type of ice box pudding that you do not need to slice, you will like to keep this recipe handy.

Clothes for Midsummer Are Carefully Designed

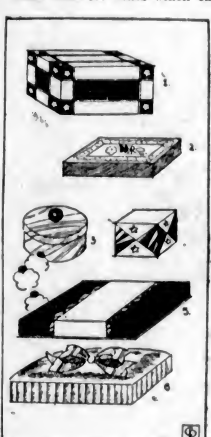

By LUCIEN LELONG
Special Cable to Central Press
PARIS.—The life of the Summer wardrobe is more brief and fleeting than that of any other season of the year. Despite this fact—or, rather, because of it—the wardrobe for this particular season entails more planning than any other. To have a sufficient variety of costumes for all Summer occasions, both for town and country, yet not a vast wardrobe, requires careful thought and consideration. The beginning of June marks the birth of the Summer frock, and the end of August its demise—and it is rare indeed that it can be resurrected for the following year. Accordingly, ladies with a wary eye on their budgets, will use discretion about their selection of the Summer wardrobe.

The printed silk frock has, of course, proven itself to be one of the most stable members of the Summer wardrobe. It has all the qualities that make a Summer frock perfect. It is attractive and smart—looks cool and is cool, and can be worn from morning until evening without marring its serene charm. If you are averse to appearing in the street without cost, as so many women are, a matching fingertip or knee-length jacket adds no great burden in the form of heat.

PRINTS ENDORSED
Never has the printed ensemble received so much endorsement from smart women as it has this season. It is appropriate both for town and for country. And there are such a variety of designs offered for your be made at home by the woman who uses the scissors and paste pot deftly.

No. 1 is a large cardboard box covered with strips of colored paper combined with silver. Narrow silver paper outlines the panels and corners and silver stars decorate the box. The lid opens and closes on a silver ribbon tie which is laced through perforations at the back. It could be used for any number of things after its gift is used or put away.

No. 2 is covered with paper, and then a lace dolly from a candy box is pasted on the cover. A flower with separate petals, leaves and stem is then applied on the lace dolly. It would find many uses in the guest room, and might even have a guest towel inside for an original gift.

No. 3 is covered with silver paper, and a huge wooden bead makes a cunning handle. It could be filled with cotton powder puffs, each with a little wooden bead to match sewed on for convenience in using.

No. 4 is colored paper put on in triangular designs and trimmed with stars.

No. 5 shows a nice way to disguise a store box. If the box is a nice color but has an ad on the top, it may be covered with a wide strip of silver paper with a scalloped border to blend with the box color.

No. 6 is a quilted box. Satin is pleated around the sides and the top is quilted with cotton. A huge bow finishes it. Nice for hankies and gloves.

Style Whimsies

"Windblown" is the word. It's applied to collars on coats and dresses and to practically everything else. It's a movement to the front, as if a strong wind were at your back—like a windblown bob, of course.

Beetroot and currant colored jewelry is the latest fad for costume pretties.

Black and white, set off by white jewelry, is a great Paris favorite. Soft, squally bags of quilted red leather are new and very smart with the white suit.

Short capes are very smart in Paris as substitutes for jackets.

Straight, narrow afternoon skirts, split at either seam a few inches from the hem, are noted frequently in Paris.
